Above all, the man who would meet his responsibility to Principle must scientifically understand that he can receive nothing from the world or from any person in the world, but Mind alone giveth him "richly all things to enjoy." Only through the sincere effort of the human being to meet his responsibility to Principle, will he ever demonstrate that responsiveness alone to Truth which is the true relationship of the divine idea to its parent Mind and which Jesus describes when he says, "The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do: for what things soever he doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise."

Work

AGNES RUSH BURR

IN a discussion on the subject of labor, a student of Christian Science remarked to another: "To go back to the work one did ten years ago seems retrogression. One should progress." Quickly came the kind and helpful reply: "Perhaps your idea of labor and your idea of progress need correcting. Ten years ago you may not have had the right idea of work. You may have to go back, as you call it, until you get the correct view. In getting this right view, you come to know what true work is, and thus you do progress." Not only was the reply illuminating, but the more it was pondered the clearer became the understanding of true labor. Looking back to the thought that had been held ten years before of this special work, it was seen that it had then been considered only as a means of earning a living, getting one's bread in the sweat of one's brow, as the Adam-man had been condemned to do because of his belief in materiality. In the light of the kindly, guiding counsel of the friend, it was seen as service, as brotherly helpfulness; and whereas in the past it had been drudgery, now it was joy.

"We need to correct our ideas in regard to many forms of work," continued this friend in the same interview, "and thus we bring healing to the business world; and healing is needed in the business world quite as much as in the physical realm. Business must be seen truly." This thought also came illuminatingly when later a friend was somewhat shamefacedly apologizing for certain work she had taken up. She felt it beneath her, but there seemed nothing else to do and so she had very pluckily, as she considered, accepted it. Such work entered into with the right motive would be a healing in this line of labor. It would bring to the world's view of it the thought that no labor is menial if it is worthily performed and is of service. And the world to-day needs this healing. No task was too lowly for Jesus to perform if thereby he healed an incorrect view of it. In "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 340) Mrs. Eddy says, "There is no excellence without labor; and the time to work, is now."

Work, or labor, is simply service, the expression of love, helpfulness, usefulness. It may be called various names by the world, but in essence it is a contribution to the general good. In order to heal in our own thought an incorrect view of some special kind of work, we may have to go back, seemingly, to tasks we may think we have outgrown; but this is not retrogression; it is progression. It may be a healing necessary to the perfection required of us, or our opportunity by engaging with the right motive in some task the world is not appraising correctly, to bring healing to a wider need. Having done our work in either of these ways, we do not stop. We go on to fuller expression, to what from the world's point of view is considered larger work. We cannot, however, go on to larger activities from which there will be no turning back, until each step thereto has been taken correctly. To express it differently, we must lay each stone truly and perfectly in the foundation upon which the superstructure rests. We must be "faithful over a few things" before we can be, or in order to be, made "ruler over many things." As Paul says, "Every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is." The real work is simply serving Principle by intelligent activity.

God's Perfect Man

ALBERT H. HARDCASTLE

EVER since accepting as true the allegorical account of the creation of Adam and Eve, mankind have labored under the delusion that mortals are the fallen children of God and must wait until the second coming of a personal Savior, or until after the change called death, in order to be redeemed from this condition. The fact is, mankind never has been and never can be the child of God, for God's child is a spiritual idea, and has forever remained unfallen and perfect.

In the first chapter of Genesis we read, "So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him;" and in the thirty-first verse of the same chapter, "God saw every thing that he had made, and, behold, it was very good." This is the record of creation which Christian Science declares to be true, and in speaking of this God-created man, Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, says on page 470 of Science and Health, "God is the creator of man, and, the divine Principle of man remaining perfect, the divine idea or reflection, man, remains perfect." And lower on the same page and on page 471 she says, "The relations of God and man, divine Principle and idea, are indestructible in Science; and Science knows no lapse from nor return to harmony, but holds the divine order or spiritual law, in which God and all that He creates are perfect and eternal, to have remained unchanged in its eternal history."

When the fog obscures the sun, it does not in any manner touch or injure the sun, which goes on shining just the same, though invisible to the physical senses; and the sun's rays alone eventually dispel the fog, revealing the sun in all its beauty and splendor. Just so is it with mankind and God's perfect, spiritual man. Men have accepted as true all of the material beliefs under which they are laboring and by which their lives are apparently governed; as a consequence, they are ignorant of true spiritual identity. But these material beliefs do not in any manner touch or injure God's spiritual truth, which has forever remained perfect and in active operation, and which is the only possible thing that will destroy material beliefs.

Each time a ray of truth is perceived, it displaces some material belief previously entertained. As this revelation of the truth is pondered, it leads into the perception of the infinity of Truth, which being subjected to reason and application is found to be demonstrable. As this process is continued, consciousness is found to be filled only with pure, spiritual truth, and necessarily apart from material beliefs, and man stands revealed as the true image and likeness of God.

Thus knowing only pure, spiritual truth, and manifesting it in daily living we must bless all with whom we come in contact, for we see all in the true relationship to God. On page 502 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy has written: "The universe reflects God. There is but one creator and one creation. This creation consists of the unfolding of spiritual ideas and their identities, which are embraced in the infinite Mind and forever reflected. These ideas range from the infinitesimal to infinity, and the highest ideas are the sons and daughters of God."

From Puritanism to Christian Science

WILLIAM RUFUS SCOTT

PERHAPS no other spiritual impulse of the Puritan has been so misunderstood and misrepresented as his attitude toward so-called pleasure. The campaign of false theology to picture the Puritan as unduly solemn has been so active, and mortal mind is so ready to accept such a picture of any one who rebukes or restrains its indulgences, that the proper noun is exchanged for an adjective, and to speak of any one as puritanic is to associate that person in popular thought with an overscrupulous and affected regard for the letter of religious law.

Macaulay, usually a sympathetic and penetrating critic of Puritanism, was entirely incorrect when he said, "The Puritan hated bear-baiting, not because it gave pain to the bear, but because it gave pleasure to the spectators." This picturesquely turned sentence is widely quoted derogatorily of the Puritan, and yet the specific objection of the Puritan to bear baiting, as well as his general attitude toward the human belief of pleasure, was largely Christian and spiritually scientific, as can be substantiated by reference to the writings of Mrs. Eddy with respect to the beliefs of pleasure and pain. The inference that the Puritan should have been more solicitous about the pain of the bear than about the pleasure of the spectator, or that he was opposed to the sport solely because he believed joy to be a vice, was wrong. The Puritan saw dimly what Mrs. Eddy has made perfectly clear; namely, that man is the highest idea of God. Hence, the Puritan was correct in focusing attention upon the spectator and his concept of pleasure, for it was because of the spectator's concept of pleasure in witnessing a fight that pain was caused to the bear. By restraining the spectator from gratifying his false concept of pleasure, the Puritan saved the bear from pain; but mere restraint simply leaves the human mind with a sense of vacuity, like that produced in a child deprived of a dangerous plaything and given no hint of a better outlet for his activity.

Christian Science has a more excellent way of accomplishing the purpose of the Puritan. While Mrs. Eddy repeatedly emphasizes the falsity of a human belief of pleasure, as for instance on page 209 of "Miscellaneous Writings," where we read, "False pleasure will be, is, chastened; it has no right to be at peace," she never dealt exclusively with negatives. If she took away it was to replace. Thus where the Puritan used forcible restraint, she substitutes healing, and having destroyed the false concept she lifts thought to David's vision: "At thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore." Further support of the Puritan, even more incomprehensible to the human mind, is found in Mrs. Eddy's teaching that a belief of pain is not so harmful as a belief of pleasure, particularly if pain tends to drive us to examine the spiritual reality of existence. Thus the Puritan was intuitively right in opposing the counterfeit pleasure, although he could not articulate scientifically his inspiration, nor did he develop the joyousness that rightfully should characterize the Christian.

In view of the fact that every reference to the Puritans in the writings of Mrs. Eddy is commendatory, Christian Scientists question the integrity of adverse criticism of them or their religious influence. The observance this year of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrim-Puritans at Plymouth Rock makes it timely to study the Puritan movement. As a leaven in the political affairs of the people of England, the Puritans purged their government of much injustice and, transplanted to the western hemisphere, their activity became the vital, sustaining element in that righteous form of government peculiar then to the American colonies. Its spiritual animus has been succeeded by Christian Science. "From Puritan parents," Mrs. Eddy writes in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 359), "the discoverer of Christian Science early received her religious education." Again, on page 46 of "No and Yes" she writes, "As dutiful descendants of Puritans, let us lift their standard higher, rejoicing, as Paul did, that we are free born. Man has a noble destiny; and the full-orbed significance of this destiny has dawned on the sick-bound and sin-enslaved. For the unfolding of this upward tendency to health, greatness, and goodness, I shall continue to labor and wait." These and other comments will make all loyal students of Christian Science alert to think and speak justly of the Puritans, and to defend them from the aggressive efforts discernible on all sides to discredit their world-wide, beneficent influence.

Immanuel

MARY SPARKS

I WAS blind, but now I see
God is with us every hour;
Now His mighty love makes free,
And there is no other power.

I was blind, but now I see,
See the way through time's dark maze,
See the Sun of Righteousness
Rise with healing in His rays.

I was blind, but now I see,
See there is no pain, no death;
Life unbroken e'er must be,
For the Spirit gives us breath.

I was blind, but now I see,
All earth's sin and sorrow fall;
Heaven comes, the discords flee,
Joy is ours, for good is all.

Selected Articles

["The Sword of Truth"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U. S. A., April 14, 1920]

It was at the time when Jesus sent out his twelve disciples with "power against unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal all manner of sickness and all manner of disease," that he gave them words of comfort which have come down through the centuries as a priceless heritage to humanity. The tenth chapter of Matthew, in which they may be found, is brimful of hope and admonition. There the Master at one point warns them against evil, as when he tells them to "beware of men," and to "fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul." Thereafter he goes on to state that his message, which they were to deliver, would have the effect of stirring up the human mind, sometimes to an extraordinary degree. "Think not," he said, "that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword." And the words were spoken by him who, as it is recorded in the very next chapter, also said, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

If the passages quoted be read superficially and without some understanding of the Principle which Jesus taught and practiced, they are bound to appear contradictory. But if they be interpreted through an understanding of divine Principle, they become perfectly plain. The whole endeavor of Christ Jesus was to reveal God, divine Principle, to mankind. He found the world grossly material, living in the belief that matter is real, and, in consequence, indulging itself in all forms of sensuousness. It was to a great extent away from the knowledge of the living and true God. The mission of Christ Jesus was the endeavor to counteract this materialism through spiritual understanding, through the absolute knowledge which he possessed of Principle or Truth. He knew that only in this way could the world possibly be healed of sickness, sin, and death. When, then, he gave forth out of the plenitude of his knowledge the truth about God, and when this truth reached the ears of those sunk deep in materialism, what was bound to follow? Resentment, hatred, opposition to Truth, and the endeavor to do injury to the one who proclaimed the Messianic message. As Mrs. Eddy has said in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 19), "The Master forbore not to speak the whole truth, declaring precisely what would destroy sickness, sin, and death, although his teaching set households at variance, and brought to material beliefs not peace, but a sword."

What happened in Jesus' time happens frequently to-day. Christian Science is the truth about Principle. It is absolute in its statements. It compromises not at all with the false material beliefs of the human mind. The result is that its teachings sometimes meet with opposition, the opposition of the carnal mind, which would fain rend those who are endeavoring to be faithful to Principle by applying what they understand of the truth to problems of human existence. Indeed, there are few who are not somewhat antagonistic to truth when first it is brought before them. But in many cases the opposition is short-lived, for the logic of Christian Science appeals irresistibly to the sincere and earnest inquirer. It is well to remember this, and to recollect also that the truth which Christian Science reveals, because it is absolute, must ultimately be universally accepted.

Sometimes the suggestion comes to one that since spiritual Truth is like a sword to error, giving rise to resentment, anger, and such like passions, it were wiser to withhold it.

Here is where wisdom is necessary, wisdom to discern the right time to declare it. There is little use telling the truth to those unprepared to receive it. They would only turn round and deny that which would bless them. If one be endeavoring to live in accordance with Principle, however, reflecting in his life in some measure the qualities of perfect Mind, showing forth loving-kindness, striving to think and act from the basis of good, he cannot fail in discernment. And when the truth is uttered to those who are reaching out for it, the effect will be one of healing and peace. It is always a question of where individuals stand in their desire for Truth. If they be sincerely desirous of the knowledge of Principle they welcome its message joyfully, and it brings rest unto their souls; but if the god of this world, matter, is what they worship without having the desire to part with it, then Truth will be to them as a two-edged sword.

So long as material belief seems to persist, there will continue the conflict between Truth and error. Until the truth about man, as the perfect, spiritual idea of God, has been universally known and demonstrated, the warfare will go on. The understanding of Principle must be continuously assailing the false beliefs of the human mind which are synonymous with sin, disease, and death. How, then, has spiritual understanding to be used? Fearlessly! At the same time—and this is where protection to the individual comes in—all error when it has been exposed must be recognized as having no reality. "Expose and denounce the claims of evil and disease in all their forms, but realize no reality in them" (Science and Health, p. 447). That is the secret of protection in handling the false claims of error. If error be attacked as if it were real, it is not being scientifically met, and the attacker is bound to suffer. He may be quite well-meaning, but his method is metaphysically unsound. Let a man clear his consciousness of the belief that evil is real by gaining an understanding of the allness of divine Principle, the allness of the Principle of good; he will then be in a position to "expose and denounce the claims of evil and disease in all their forms," without suffering for his courageous endeavor.

In the tenth chapter of Matthew, already alluded to, the great Teacher says that "he that findeth his life shall lose it: and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it." The words are in perfect keeping with the rest of his teaching. As Truth reveals the allness of Spirit, a man begins to realize that man, Spirit's creation, is spiritual; and as he does so he lays down or loses his false material sense of life. "Truth is a two-edged sword, guarding and guiding," Mrs. Eddy has written on page 538 of Science and Health. And on the same page there follow the words, "Radiant with mercy and justice, the sword of Truth gleams afar and indicates the infinite distance between Truth and error, between the material and spiritual,—the unreal and the real."

[James M. Stevens in Lake County Chronicle, Two Harbors, Minn.]

Christian Science apparently is causing considerable perturbation to the local ministers, if one is to judge by the church notices appearing in a recent issue of the Chronicle. But why, one asks, should these good men become so exercised over the teachings of Christian Science? Have they forgotten Gamaliel's advice to the council: "And now I say unto you, Refrain from these men, and let them alone: for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought: but if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; lest haply ye be found even to fight against God," and placed themselves in the position of the priests and elders who demanded the extinction of Paul because he was a "pestilent fellow"?

In Jesus' time many of the priests and elders, schooled in material wisdom and bound by their materialistic beliefs, were unable to understand his teachings and his explanation of God, and because they could not understand him they demanded his crucifixion. Their ignorance and bigotry, however, did not change the truth of Jesus' teachings, nor can all the ridicule and venom which is heaped upon Christian Science alter in the least the truth of its teachings.

Christian Science is primarily, fundamentally, and entirely Christian. It is the same religion which Jesus taught and practiced, and for the teaching and practice of which he was crucified by those who could not understand him. Christian Scientists accept the undivided garment of the Christ. They do not accept part of Jesus' commands and ignore part of them, but endeavor in all their words and acts to emulate the great Exemplar. The Christian Science teaching concerning God is exactly the same as that which Jesus taught. Christian Science does not make a single assertion concerning God for which it has not absolute Scriptural authority. It teaches that God is the one, self-existent and eternal Supreme Being, Spirit, Life, Truth, Love, the infinite intelligence or Mind; the only power and presence; the only cause or creator; the perfect and infinite All-in-all. If our critic, who claims to have set forth the "manifest absurdity of the Christian Science doctrine of God," has explained God in this way, he has "set forth" no absurdity; if he has not explained God in this way, he has not been accurate in his statements.

Mrs. Eddy was a pure, noble, refined, loving, and lovable woman. She was a sincere, honest, and consecrated student of the Bible. It is difficult to understand why a minister of the gospel, just because he does not happen to comprehend or accept her viewpoint, should refer to her teachings in the slurring term "Eddy-ism." Her teachings are Christian, pure, simple, direct, healing, and regenerating. Every word contained in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" and her other writings, is true. The only way they can be made to appear otherwise is to separate phrases and sentences from their immediate context and make them appear to mean something other than their real meaning.

[Charles W. J. Tennant in The Kentish Observer, Canterbury, England]

In a recent issue there appears a paragraph in which a correspondent takes upon himself to describe what he believes Christian Science to be. Not knowing anything whatever about it, he naturally fails to convey a correct impression of its teaching and practice.

He says, for instance, "There is nothing about it that warrants the name of science; it is simply a matter of faith and will power, with an admixture of deep religious fervor." Christian Science has every reason for its name. Our critic is perhaps not unaware that science means knowledge systematically arranged, and is derived from the Latin word "scire," to know. Christian Science is Christian knowledge.

Human will power does not enter into the practice of Christian Science; on the contrary, it is through the silencing of the human will and the listening for the "still small voice" of Truth, whereby the divine Mind of Christ takes the place of the human, that the healing and regenerating work is accomplished. Having faith in the omnipotence, omniscience, and omnipresence of God, is essential. The religious fervor or zeal of a Christian Scientist grows in proportion to his ability to demonstrate scientifically the healing power of Truth and Love.

Christian Science is healing sin and disease to-day as no other system in the world is doing. When one considers that the majority of cases undertaken and healed by Christian Science practitioners, have tried nearly every other method first, without receiving any lasting benefit, its therapeutic art will be fully realized. Mrs. Eddy writes in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" on page 369: "The prophylactic and therapeutic (that is, the preventive and curative) arts belong emphatically to Christian Science, as would be readily seen, if psychology, or the Science of Spirit, God, was understood." Christian Science heals morally, physically, and spiritually. It is the method of Christ Jesus, and is therefore the best and only way of removing the sins of the world.

[W. Truman Green in Tampa (Fla.) Tribune]

A critic asserts that Christian Science teaches that God is good. We gladly acknowledge that Christian Science does so teach and prove. Not only does Christian Science teach this, but it further teaches that God's creation is like Himself, good, as stated in the record of creation where the Bible says, "God saw every thing that he had made, and, behold, it was very good." It is patent to any one that sin, sickness, and disease are not the creation of God. They are the opposite of Life, Truth, and Love. It was the mission of our Master, Christ Jesus, to do the will of God, to bear witness to the truth. He said concerning his work, "I seek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent me." His life work was largely devoted to the destruction of sin, sickness, and death, showing conclusively that these were not the creation of God, but that they had their origin in the human mind, which Paul said was "enmity against God."

The evangelist makes an old threadbare assertion "that Christian Science is neither science nor Christian." The Christian Science movement with its churches in all parts of the civilized world, established through its uplifting, healing ministry, is the proof of its Christianity, and the demonstration of its Science.

[C. W. Hale in Pharos-Reporter, Logansport, Ind.]

The sermon reported in a recent issue misrepresents and misinterprets the teachings of Christian Science, and reveals again the fact that a material interpretation of the Bible brings to the reader uncertainty, confusion, and contradiction. Spiritually interpreted, the Bible proves to be wholly consistent, and enables the student to apply its teachings and prove the law of God given therein in the way Christ Jesus did and commanded his followers to do.

In the effort made to explain the difference between "mental healing" and Christian Science this critic seems to admit vast powers to the human mind, while his statements pertaining to spiritual processes are vague and complicated, and in no way does he show how he heals by spiritual process. This would indicate a lack of understanding of what spiritual healing is, and an extreme ignorance of Christian Science practice.

Let it be understood definitely and positively that the power of human will does not enter into the practice or teaching of Christian Science. Suggestion, hypnotism, mesmerism, and all other occult processes of the human mind are dangerous and undesirable. Their influence is wholly bad, and places unsuspecting people at the mercy of selfish and evil manipulations and influences. This is confirmed by the statement of Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, on page 144 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" where we read: "Human will-power is not Science. Human will belongs to the so-called material senses, and its use is to be condemned. Willing the sick to recover is not the metaphysical practice of Christian Science, but is sheer animal magnetism. Human will-power may infringe the rights of man. It produces evil continually, and is not a factor in the realism of being. Truth, and not corporeal will, is the divine power which says to disease, 'Peace, be still.'"

Spiritual healing is accomplished through the power of God, infinite, divine Mind. It teaches and proves man's relation to God, and that God, the one eternal power, governs, guides, and controls man, giving to him peace, harmony, and health. So in Christian Science it is positively demonstrated that sin and sickness were not created by God, but are the manifestations of a supposititious consciousness apart from God, and that the regenerating influence of a pure, clear realization of God's love and ever presence and of man's coexistence with God brings as its inevitable consequence deliverance from all evil, sin, disease, and death.

Christian Science accepts unreservedly the teachings of the Bible, and does not deny the atonement of Christ Jesus. It gives to mankind the highest and holiest sense of what the atonement is, and proves its teaching by practical demonstration in the healing of sickness and the overcoming of sin. Christian Science teaches that the mission of Christ Jesus was to reveal and prove the love of God to man, and to demonstrate the way out of sinful beliefs into man's rightful heritage as "heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ." Christ Jesus showed to mankind the real relationship of God to man, and demonstrated the atonement, man's at-one-ment or unity with God, and consequently his dominion over all phases of false beliefs and everything that would claim to separate him from God.

The teachings of Christian Science are accurate and scientific, and cannot be fully comprehended by a superficial perusal of a portion of Mrs. Eddy's writings. Not in one instance does it take anything from the teachings of the Bible, but by its spiritual interpretation of the Scriptures brings to man the fullness of joy, the blessedness of purity and peace, and as a natural and unfailing consequence the overcoming of sin and the healing of sickness.

[Harry K. Filler in The Monroe County Republican, Woodsfield, Ohio]

Under the caption, "Self-Hypnosis not Uncommon," a critic in the Republican quite plainly displays his ignorance of Christian Science and of the Christian Science method of healing when he states, "His patients believe in him (the Christian Scientist) and that they are going to be cured, and they are." Christian Scientists heal by the same method Jesus employed. He said, "The Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works." The Christian Scientist must know of the omnipotence and omnipresence of God; God must be All-in-all to him, and the producer only of that which is good; then he may be sure that whatever comes to disturb or annoy is not of God, and has no real power, for God is All, and He is the only power. God is the Physician in Christian Science. The psalmist sang, "Bless the Lord, O my soul . . . who healeth all thy diseases." It is because Christian Scientists are taught to understand the Bible better than they understood it before that they are able to heal by the power it reveals.

In the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, on page 110, we read, "In following these leadings of scientific revelation, the Bible was my only textbook. The Scriptures were illumined; reason and revelation were reconciled, and afterwards the truth of Christian Science was demonstrated."

Foreign Policy

NINETEEN centuries of Christianity have left Christendom broken into numerous separate nations, some one of which has, during all those centuries, been more or less constantly at war with another. As a result of this failure to demonstrate the very essence of Christianity, every one of these nations has gradually developed a policy toward its neighbors which is known as its foreign policy. Such a condition of things is sufficiently curious in itself, and argues one of two things: either the failure of Christianity, or the failure of the nations to comprehend Christianity. Now no Christian nation would admit that Christianity was a failure. Yet every one of the Christian nations of the world would be compelled to admit that it had failed to demonstrate the teachings of Christianity in its public policy. But Christianity is a Science, because it is the religion of Truth; therefore it is perfectly clear that there must be something wrong with the world's understanding of Christianity when its attempted practice for nineteen centuries has left it as discordant as it was in the days of Cæsar Augustus.

In attempting some solution of the dilemma thus presented, it is necessary to inquire what is a religion, what is Science, and what is Truth. This can, of course, only be done in the briefest possible manner, but it must be done before any conclusion can be driven home. Every one knows, then, that the word religion is derived from the Latin religio, and means living under a rule. It came into use through the habit of the religious houses of instituting a series of rules under which the inmates undertook to live; indeed, it was used originally, fairly indifferently, of the member of the order, the rule, or of the order itself. Thus religion came to signify the accepted moral philosophy of some great teacher. The Hebrews, consequently, as the first monotheistic people, lived according to the rule of the law and the prophets, the law being the Pentateuch, as received according to tradition from Moses, and the prophets being all the other books of the Old Testament, whether historic, prophetic, or of wisdom. When the great teacher of Nazareth came preaching his gospel in Palestine, he based it, naturally enough, on the teaching of the Scriptures of his own people. Thus out of the wisdom of the great Hebrew seers he developed the Science of Christianity; out of the mouths of the Hebrew prophets he furnished the prophecy of Christianity; just as in the idea of the Hebrew Messiah he found the idea of the Christ of Christianity. In the difference between the Messiah of the Old Testament and the Christ of the New there lies the difference between the law of Moses and the law of Christ; in the difference between the wisdom of Solomon and the wisdom of the Sermon on the Mount there is to be found the gulf which separates philosophy from Science; and in the difference between the prophecy of Isaiah and the prophecy of Galilee there gapes the chasm which separates spiritual intuition from the knowledge of the absolute. This is why the New Testament writers speak so repeatedly of the exact or scientific knowledge of God, of Principle; of an exact knowledge of the Son of God or the divine man; and of a scientific knowledge of love and of the will or the law of Principle.

The outcome of all this is, in the absolute necessity of things, a scientific knowledge of Truth, since it is perfectly positive that God could not be Principle if He were not Truth. Truth, then, is Principle; and it is only through a scientific knowledge of Truth that Truth can be demonstrated, and so proved to be true. This, surely, was why Jesus demanded that his followers, in all ages, should preach the gospel and heal the sick. The preaching of the gospel was the deliverance of the scientific statement of Truth, precisely what the New Testament calls the scientific knowledge of God, Truth. But this statement of Truth must remain as much a theory as any other so-called statement of Truth, such as that to which Christ Jesus was himself brought face to face in the mythology and religions of Greece or Rome, unless its truth were demonstrated. Consequently, since "Jesus of Nazareth was the most scientific man that ever trod the globe," as Mrs. Eddy has said, on page 313 of Science and Health, he was not satisfied with a mere statement of Truth, but demanded that that statement should be scientifically demonstrated in healing the sick, and in repeating those other mighty works, by means of which he had awakened Judaism and paganism into some perception of spiritual reality. Thus he proved, in the crossing of the lake, the nothingness of time; thus he showed, by walking upon the waters, the unreality of matter; thus, by the feeding of the multitudes he made it clear that substance was spiritual and mental; and, in this way, by the bedside of the daughter of Jairus, at the open mouth of the tomb of Lazarus, and finally on the cross on Calvary, he destroyed the belief in death as a reality.

Had the world really accepted the teaching of Jesus, it would have come to understand, as the New Testament demands, love scientifically, and the spectacle of Christendom broken into scores of contending nations would have become an impossibility. When, however, Christendom failed to grasp the scientific aspect of Christianity, it fell back on its emotions, and merely developed its passions. Out of these passions it produced not the love of mankind but the antagonisms of nations; and so, naturally, as the world narrowed, and civilization became more organized, it set up the war office in the place of the temple of Mars, and the foreign office in the place of the temple of Mercury, just as it took yuletide and renamed it Christmas, and converted the feast day of the dawn goddess into the Christian Easter.

Since, owing to this, the foreign nation and the foreign office exist all over the world, Christendom is still faced with the problem of demonstrating the reality of Christianity. This, it is manifest, can only be achieved in the ratio in which the Christian nations recognize that Christianity is not an emotion but a Science, and begin to recognize also the distinction drawn in the gospel of John and dwelt upon by some of the greatest critical scholars, between human love as expressed in the passions, and spiritual love in its spiritual and ethical significance. It was Sir Henry Wotton who, three centuries ago, described an ambassador as an honest man sent abroad to lie for the commonwealth. It would be difficult to conceive of a more caustic criticism of Christian diplomacy, even admitting Sir Henry's definition to be, what it is, an exaggeration of the fact. Nevertheless the maxim of the state before all else has, again and again, reduced diplomacy to a byword, because it has, all unconsciously, made a travesty of the atonement.

The conclusion of the whole matter is an exceedingly simple one. It is that nations should come to recognize that Christianity is a Science, and that it is impossible to reach a scientific conclusion until a recognition of this is made. Then when one government is face to face with another government, and an accommodation seems to be an impossibility, recourse will have to be had to the fact that there is no question which cannot be settled through an adherence to divine Science. And, in this Science the state is Principle, and men become citizens of the state in the exact degree in which they come into an at-one-ment with Principle. "Science," Mrs. Eddy writes, on page 466 of Science and Health, "will declare God aright, and Christianity will demonstrate this declaration and its divine Principle, making mankind better physically, morally, and spiritually."

FREDERICK DIXON.

Enriching the Affections

SINCE God is already infinitely rich, real man in His image, reflecting His every quality, must manifest true wealth. The richness of the one true God, divine Principle, is necessarily like its source in every respect. Thus it is wholly the intelligent activity of Principle, ordered in perfect, inexhaustible harmony. The more of Principle one uses, the more one is proving that it is infinite. The eternal unfoldment of right doing demonstrates the boundless richness of spiritual living. In true living, the only actuality is simply the emanation from the one complete cause, which is ever producing the entirety of effect. The knowing of this is thoroughly practical and efficient, because it is in itself the manifestation of divine intelligence. What a wealth there is, indeed, to the very knowing that God is good, that the divine Mind is always producing divinely right doing, with all that it involves and requires.

Genuine affection must, of course, be affection for God, for Principle, and not for materiality. Turning wholly to Mind for satisfaction, one finds the whole sufficiency of spiritual wisdom. This is all one could ever really need or want. Even though one should believe himself desirous of something else, there is, in the last analysis, nothing else to desire. The divine Mind carrying on its activity in joyous order is all there is, has been, or will be. So there positively must be every satisfying quality and manifestation of this Mind, altogether apart from any sense of mortality. What is known as affection is a disposition in a certain direction, a tendency, or attachment. The true tendency, disposition, or attachment, finds its fulfillment as divine Mind manifest, never as anything material. Affection for Principle, activity in accord with Principle, this alone is rich with freedom from all limitation and freedom to do good.

When Mrs. Eddy wrote the "Daily Prayer" in Article VIII, Section 4, of the Manual, stating: "It shall be the duty of every member of this Church to pray each day: 'Thy kingdom come;' let the reign of divine Truth, Life, and Love be established in me, and rule out of me all sin; and may Thy Word enrich the affections of all mankind, and govern them!" she pointed out clearly what enrichment is. The belief in merely mortal affections is replaced with the enduring affection for Principle in proportion as each one is determined for himself to rely wholly on God. Any human sense of things, being but counterfeit of the reality, is at the best but a poor makeshift. The melting of its worst features into their native nothingness, however, improves it, just as a dark day is improved through the dissolving of some of its obscurity when gleams of light are shot through the clouds. The true light is never any part of the dark day. In fact the dark day is improved only in proportion as it ceases to be a dark day. Likewise, poor human experience is bettered exactly in proportion as it ceases to exist and is replaced by the divinely rich.

Any affection for what may seem humanly the easiest way, any tendency to diminish effort in the presence of seeming difficulties, any reliance upon supposed material stimulus, or even any narrow attachment to mortal routine, in short, any indifference whatever to the rousing demands of Principle must give way before the infinity of what God knows and does. Such merely mortal affections can be enriched only as they are completely transmuted by the wealth of that spiritual activity which is the expression, or Word, of God. Only when one turns entirely away from any suppositional source of material gratification to divine intelligence infinitely manifest, is one really satisfied. True and lasting success is sure for the one who with consecration reasons wholly on the basis of Principle and finds this reasoning in itself the joy of living. Such reasoning and living are not limited to any finite concept but are free, with all the varied play and interplay of perfect harmony. The one absolutely free movement is the perpetual motion of the divine Mind.

After all, one could never want to do more or less than express and enjoy the divine consciousness. All mankind must eventually admit that the giving expression to genuine Spirit is the only prosperity. As Mrs. Eddy says on page 203 of "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany": "Goodness and philanthropy begin with work and never stop working. All that is worth reckoning is what we do, and the best of everything is not too good, but is economy and riches." Later, on the same page, she continues, "A deep sincerity is sure of success, for God takes care of it." By knowing this truth and practicing it day by day, one necessarily proves that his affections are being enriched, through the disappearance of just so much materiality. All materiality is superfluous and has to be superseded by that serving of Principle which is ever rich with opportunity. By expressing intelligence, one is serving intelligence, and this very activity is the service which is valuable to all mankind as well as to God. The divine Mind, expressed by the only real man there is, works ceaselessly and effectually. Thus we see clearly that to accept the completely rich divine consciousness of right activity as the only reality is the only way unerringly to reject the superfluous and metaphysically to be, as Paul puts it, "enriched in every thing to all bountifulness, which causeth through us thanksgiving to God."

Among the Churches

Current Notes

MOUNTAIN LAKES, N. J.—The Christian Science Society of Mountain Lakes has incorporated as First Church of Christ, Scientist.

The society was formed May 2, 1915. Services were held at a private residence up to November, 1915, when the privilege of holding the services in the Mountain Lakes schoolhouse was granted by the Board of Education. In January, 1919, having secured a plot of property with building, the same was remodeled and furnished as a church, at a cost of $6600. The first service was held on Sunday, March 16, 1919. The church is located at the corner of the Boulevard and Briarclyffe Road, and has a frontage on the Boulevard of one hundred and twenty-five feet, with a depth of one hundred and ninety-eight feet on Briarclyffe Road. The site is considered one of the best in Mountain Lakes. The church has a seating capacity of one hundred and twenty-five persons.—Mountain Lakes News.

The Lectures

AKRON, OHIO (First Church).—Rev. Andrew J. Graham, lecturer; introduced by Alfred Herberich, who said in part:—

Christian Science does not really purport to be anything new; it only purports to be a rediscovery or rebirth of the teachings of our great Master, Jesus the Christ, in their entirety. Christian Science is not destructive, but constructive and positive. Therefore it does not desire to take away from humanity anything of comfort or good. It has no quarrels with the Christian religions or the Christian church or any of its denominations. It is Christianity. Rather, in the spirit expressed in some of the words of our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, on page 99 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Christian Scientists follow her when she says, "I love mankind, and shall continue to labor and to endure."

WACO, TEXAS (First Church).—Dr. John M. Tutt, lecturer; introduced by Joseph P. MacDonald, who said in part:—

The keynote of Christian Science is love, love to God and man. It recognizes God as the one and only power, and the Christ as the only healer of sin and disease. Christ Jesus is the source, the inspiration, and the motive power of this great movement. He proved that truth, when applied as he taught, would free mankind from sin, sickness, and death. This healing power was early lost sight of and obscured. It has remained for Christian Science to bring to this age a realization of the healing consciousness which was expressed in the highest degree by Jesus of Nazareth. Christian Science is the torch of hope which for over half a century has been lighting up barren human lives with spiritual understanding. It has healed millions of cases of sickness. It is proving the purpose of divine Love to bring health, peace, prosperity, equity, and good will to humanity, and to maintain these harmonious conditions for all. It is not a religion of mere profession but one of demonstration.

EDINBURGH, SCOTLAND (First Church).—Frank Bell, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Alice L. Hamilton, who said in part:—

Christian Science came to me sixteen years ago and brought me a wonderful recognition of God as Love, and of man as the child of this Love. This recognition healed me instantaneously of heart trouble from which I had suffered for many years, thus proving that this Love can be appreciated and demonstrated by human beings here and now and that it is a Love human beings want, not the kind of Love that we were told sent us afflictions for our good.

KINGSTON, N. Y. (First Church).—Ezra W. Palmer, lecturer; introduced by Morris Darius Givens, who said in part:—

That Christian Science heals both sin and sickness, there can be no question. Thousands testify to this the world over. In the beginning of the first century, Christ Jesus said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me." This way of Life and Truth which leads to the Father, the everlasting and infinite God, has always existed, before as well as after the advent of Jesus the Christ, who revealed the truth concerning God and His creation to the age in which he lived. And in like manner its full statement was rediscovered to this age, after centuries of obscurity, by Mary Baker Eddy. Jesus commanded his followers to live the life he lived, to tread the pathway he trod, and to do the works he did. This also is made emphatic by Christian Science. In the midst of sickness, contagion, and other so-called perils and uncertainties of human existence, Christian Science stands as a rock. It is exact in statement, accurate in application, and it heals when all other methods fail.

FARGO, N. DAK. (First Church).—Miss Mary G. Ewing, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Nelle Barnes, who said in part:—

Christian Science is the revelation of Truth to this age, proving to us that the words and works of Jesus of Nazareth were not intended for a particular period, but are demonstrably true to-day and in all ages. To the weary, Christian Science brings rest; to the sorrowing, comfort; to the sick, health and peace.

In the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, on page 390 are these words: "It is our ignorance of God, the divine Principle, which produces apparent discord, and the right understanding of Him restores harmony." Through the understanding of God as taught in Christian Science, thousands have been healed and regenerated and can joyfully say with the psalmist, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits; who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases."

BISHOP, CALIF. (Society).—Dr. Walton Hubbard, lecturer; introduced by T. G. Watterson, who said in part:—

The demonstrable good that has obtained in our lives through the overcoming of sin, sickness, and selfishness, has given us a peace that the world could not give, and the world cannot take away, and we would joyfully share it with you. When there is peace in the individual consciousness, there is peace in the home, peace in social relations, peace in business, peace in national and international affairs, and this is what the whole world is sadly in need of at the present time.

Ever since the initial mileposts of Christian history, the answer to the human longing for peace has been at hand, and what is known as Christian Science is the practical import of the teaching of the Master made plain and unmistakable to-day and now.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN. (Fifth Church).—Judge Samuel W. Greene, lecturer; introduced by Eugene Perrin, who said in part:—

This age demands proof of the practical availability of every product of human effort. Human achievements are interesting and necessary waymarks in the progress of civilization. Greater efficiency in the performance of the affairs of daily life is attained by their use, but no one will contend that sin, sickness, accident, or death have been made less prevalent because of them. Health, joy, and peace are not the products of human ingenuity and invention. That it may be uplifted, the world needs the knowledge of that Science which Jesus demonstrated when he cleansed the lepers, healed the sick, raised the dead. He gave his promise that those who seek and find the Father whom he reveals to human understanding, shall do the works which he did, and even greater works.

The human race to-day, as in the ages that have gone, needs to be delivered. It is keenly aware at times of its afflictions, and the desire to save humanity from these sufferings is what has induced the most heroic efforts of men and women. At all stages in the world's history there have sprung from the people individuals with a vision of the ideal beyond the range of that of their fellows; and these seers have tried to communicate to all who would listen to them their idealism for the amelioration of the world's woes.

To me it is very significant that as the followers of our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer of Christian Science, are steadily increasing in number, there is another large number of Christian people throughout the world, who are looking more expectantly than ever before for the fulfillment of the promised second coming of Christ, and are experiencing the fulfillment of that long looked for event by turning from matter to Spirit, from human agencies to God, for the solution of all their problems.

FORT LAUDERDALE, FLA. (Society).—John W. Doorly, lecturer; introduced by C. P. Weidling, who said in part:—

At this time the whole world seems to be in turmoil, and we are all endeavoring to meet the conditions harmoniously. In order to solve any problem we must first understand the principle underlying it. If we wish to solve the problems of our everyday life, we must first learn to know what Life really is. To those who seek this knowledge, Christian Science has a message.

LONDON, ENGLAND (First Church).—Frank Bell, lecturer; introduced by R. B. Scholfield, who said in part:—

Christian Science brings to us all a message of hope, strength, joy, and peace. There is one condition, however, which it is wise to observe, if we would seek its teachings. This is that we consider it in the spirit and not merely in the letter. If you devote yourselves solely to the consideration of the letter, you will in all probability quarrel with it, as I did when first I attempted to read about Christian Science.

In the centuries that have intervened since our great Master, Jesus of Nazareth, was proving to mankind the purpose of his mission, nothing is more obvious than that the seamless robe of preaching the gospel and healing the sick has been divided and torn apart. Most of you here to-night probably remember that during our early education we were told to go to one school of thought or teaching for physical healing, and to a totally different one for mental, moral, or spiritual healing. Christian Science has come to join together once more these great sacred offices of healing the sick and preaching the gospel. Jesus, Paul, Peter, John, Elijah, and Elisha, and many other great characters proved in their lives the unity of these two great offices, and they did more than this, because they showed that they were combined in that kingdom of heaven, or reign of harmony, which Jesus said "is within you"—within the reach of all of us.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH. (First Church).—Rev. Andrew J. Graham, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Bertha B. Bliss, who said in part:—

In Isaiah we read, "And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow into it. And many people shall go and say, Come ye and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths." In our day is this prophecy fulfilled; for there never was a time when human thought was so receptive of divine truth, and never a time when truth was so clearly presented. To-day mankind is discerning the unerring science of the truth which Christ Jesus gave to the world when he pointed out the path and taught a "new and living way" to the kingdom of our God. Christian Science is founded upon the teachings of Christ Jesus, and in obedience to his commands is, by spiritual means alone, healing the sick, reforming the sinner, lifting the burden from the weary and heavy laden.

WATTS, CALIF. (Society).—Dr. John M. Tutt, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Charlotte Fugate, who said in part:—

It has been frequently asserted that students of Christian Science are noticeable for an appearance of happiness and contentment. Granting this to be true, it may be assumed that you have come here to-night with a desire to seek a reason for this apparent condition and a working rule for guidance in this quest. This may be presented to you in quotations from a book you have always been taught to love and reverence, the Book of books, the Holy Bible.

The words of Job, "Acquaint now thyself with him [God], and be at peace," were followed centuries later by these words from the lips of the greatest of all teachers, "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent" and, "The kingdom of God is within you." This, then, defines Christian Science as a process of getting acquainted with, or knowing God, and to the extent that this present day reappearing of demonstrable truth is accepted and practiced, the door of the kingdom swings open, and our daily life becomes an expression of that eternal life of harmony and peace which is heaven.—The Suburban Home.

CHICAGO, ILL. (Sixteenth Church).—Judge Samuel W. Greene, lecturer; introduced by George T. Palmer, who said in part:—

The ministry of Jesus was twofold. He not only taught the truth as set forth in the parables, the Sermon on the Mount, and the Lord's Prayer, but he demonstrated that truth in the destruction of sin, in the healing of the sick, and in the raising of the dead. Seldom did he make a declaration of truth that he did not bring to human consciousness its proof in the destruction of the counterfeit false belief.

Nineteen centuries later when Mrs. Eddy discovered this Christ, Truth, or Christian Science, she, like the Master, proved it by demonstration. After thoroughly testing and proving her discovery of this healing and saving truth, she gave it to the world in that divinely inspired book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures."

DULUTH, MINN. (First Church).—Ezra W. Palmer, lecturer; introduced by Edward C. Kennedy, who said in part:—

The problems confronting the world in this present period of unrest and confusion are engaging the attention of thinking men and women to a greater extent than has ever before been known; material methods of solution and material means of adjustment are proving inadequate; time-honored religious doctrines, age worn creeds, and ancient rituals though amended, remodeled, and rewritten, do not satisfy.

Millions are looking for the advent of the Comforter, "even the Spirit of truth," which was promised by our Savior, and are anxiously inquiring, When? Millions more, however, who have found surcease of sorrow and suffering, relief from sin and sickness, and are experiencing in daily life the fruits of right thinking, right living,—peace, joy, happiness, and health, through the study and practice of Christian Science, are ready to answer, The Comforter is come; I have found the truth, the truth has made me free.

Testimonies of Healing

The proofs that Principle, Love, is the only power—is God, have been coming into my daily experience for thirty years. I first learned this truth through the treatment given me for what I believed to be valvular heart trouble, never having had proper heart action from birth. Doctors had stated that I had seven chronic diseases, each one "incurable." Thoroughly discouraged, believing my family would be freed of a burden if I were not with them, I longed to die, thinking that would end it all, or hoping so. I had no definite idea about the future and knew very little of the teaching of the Bible on the subject; I did not understand it and did not believe any one else knew anything of the future life, if there was such an experience. Within three weeks I was completely healed of all, and Science and Health and the Bible were becoming open books to me. So filled with wonder and grandeur and so convincing in every statement were they that my life rapidly grew into one of happiness, health, and success. The physical healing was completely overshadowed by the spiritual awakening, and only those who have known like experiences can appreciate what it means to be lifted out of such darkness.

It must necessarily follow that my gratitude is unlimited to Mrs. Eddy, the one who made this possible by herself following in the footsteps of the great Teacher, Christ Jesus, following so closely that by her example mankind is enabled to prove that to him that overcometh, will the kingdom of heaven be revealed.

Since I am so far from a Christian Science church and unable to give my testimony at the Wednesday evening meeting, I should like to give it through the Sentinel. For years I was afflicted with chronic hives and suffered the greatest agony, and could not get any relief. I tried all the different schools of medicine in both cities where I had lived, but was not healed until I found Christian Science. Then in less than two weeks I was completely healed, also of other chronic troubles. I thank God, and our dear Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, for the great blessing she brought to a sick and suffering people.

Mrs. Eddy established many channels for blessings and indicated many means of growth for us, among them the giving of testimony at the Wednesday evening meetings and in our periodicals. I have found it to be true that blessings follow any effort I put forth to obey our Leader's commands and precepts. To enumerate all the blessings would be impossible, for the best of them are the gradual elimination of undesirable traits of character and a generally improved mental attitude toward one's fellow men. But there are many benefits that can be gratefully acknowledged in definite terms and I gladly tell a few in the hope that some one may be helped by the telling.

My husband and I had known of Christian Science for some years before we were willing even to try to accept its teachings. A series of financial reverses, together with the evidence of healing of other members of the family, brought us to the point where we decided to take up the study. My husband was a druggist at that time and we had on hand a bottle of five hundred tablets for stomach and bowel trouble. We both partook of these tablets regularly. Their use was discontinued at once and we have enjoyed normal functioning of the organs supposedly affected. Sluggish liver and sore throat were other false beliefs of which we were healed. After a few months the way was opened for my husband to leave the drug business. At the same time I was enabled to return to my former profession of teaching, after having been away from it for ten years. Our financial affairs have improved and we are learning to demonstrate supply, not through human will and planning, but by looking to God as the source and substance of all good. The most marked physical healing I have experienced was from the results of a tooth extraction. It was an impacted wisdom tooth, the roots having grown at right angles to the crown, and the tooth itself being imbedded in the jawbone. I was under gas for twenty minutes, while two dentists drilled the tooth from the jawbone. When I revived the dentist said that my face would turn black, the jaw would be sore for weeks, pieces of bone would keep coming up, and that there might be infection. A practitioner's help was obtained at once and, except for a few days' soreness of the jaw, all the predicted evils were averted. Not an hour was lost from my work and much gratitude was experienced for the protecting care of divine Love. This demonstration was more greatly appreciated because I witnessed the distress and suffering of two friends who had similar experiences with their teeth but without the knowledge and help of Christian Science. By such comparison we learn how much we escape through knowing the truth.

The demonstration for which we are most grateful was the healing of my husband during the epidemic of influenza. He was stricken at work and came home very ill. Through help from a practitioner, he obtained immediate relief and went back to work. At the factory all the mortal mind laws were brought to bear upon the case, with the result that a vicious second attack was undergone. This was much more severe than the first. At times he was so weak that he felt he was passing on, but by turning to God as the source of life and strength, he was restored. In ten days' time he was enabled to return to work, and what surprised his fellow workmen most was that he experienced none of the after effects so generally associated with the belief of influenza. In Science and Health (p. 6) Mrs. Eddy says: "'God is Love.' More than this we cannot ask, higher we cannot look, farther we cannot go." In such comprehensive statements as this we find the Principle of Christian Science by which we are able to demonstrate over every human difficulty. Gratitude, desire, willingness, and obedience, all so essential to our progress in spiritual understanding, are best expressed in deeds. Yet it is also fitting that we put our gratitude into words, so with the psalmist we sing, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits: who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases."

(Mrs.) Katherine Rutter, Cleveland, Ohio.

I have received so much help and encouragement from the testimonies in the Christian Science periodicals that I feel I should like to give mine in the hope that it will also help some one. I heard of Christian Science about eight years ago, when I was in great need, and it has helped me ever since, in every problem that has presented itself. The first healing I received was the overcoming of a very decided claim of hate, caused through jealousy. It has been a complete and permanent healing. Then one of my sons developed bronchial pneumonia, as materia medica called it, and I became dreadfully afraid of what the consequences might be, and thought since the doctors did not seem to be doing the child any good (though I know they were giving him every attention they could at the time) I had better ask a practitioner to take up the case. Her understanding of the truth just lifted the whole thing off and the child was quite well after about three treatments. I then asked her to help me with the belief of hernia which this same child seemed to manifest. I had been told by the doctors that only an operation would do the child any good, because of the complications that accompanied it. I worked earnestly to understand better the unreality of imperfection, and in one week's time the healing was evident. This was eight years ago and he has never had a return of the claim. God's healing is permanent. I have overcome to a very great extent a hasty temper and am more reasonable, just, and loving. I have also been healed of the fear of lack. This was a very deep-rooted claim and I had help from many practitioners for it but it did not seem to yield entirely until I went to a good many lectures given in London, when the speaker illustrated, by the sunshine, the abundant way in which divine Love gives. He said that we could all take as much of the sunshine as we needed and yet not deprive others of all they required, and that this is how God gives. I have been able to see the truth in this statement so clearly that the fear of lack has been utterly destroyed.

We were wonderfully protected during the air raids. On one occasion two bombs were dropped, one in front and one at the back of our house, within fifty yards or so. Much damage was done but no one was even scratched by the falling glass nor hit by the shrapnel that penetrated the building in different parts. I try always to be conscious of divine Love as being the only power and presence, at all times, and that we actually dwell "in the secret place of the most High" and consequently "there shall no evil befall thee," as the psalmist has said. I am grateful for the privilege of class instruction, and my gratitude to Mrs. Eddy for her gift to humanity is beyond words to express.

For many years I suffered from stomach trouble and indigestion. In January 1918 my condition was such that we consulted a physician. He declared, after several visits, that the nerves were completely debilitated and prescribed rest and nutrition. After some weeks I felt somewhat better, but was still so weak that I was unable to attend to my household duties. I had avoided all hearty food for years, and now was able to eat scarcely anything. Even the lightest foods caused me trouble. Then I learned of Christian Science, asked for some copies of Der Herold, and requested a practitioner's help, which was lovingly given. After ten days I was much better, could digest all food, and was able to work again. I was then given absent treatment for two months, and to-day feel refreshed and healthy.

I am heartily grateful and happy that I have found Christian Science, and strive to learn more of the truth daily. I also lovingly thank all who have helped me to gain an understanding of Christian Science.

(Mrs.) LUISE DENKER, Lübeck, Germany.

It is with a deep sense of gratitude that I give my testimony to the many blessings that have come into my life since I took up the study of Christian Science. I did not come to it for physical healing, but for relief from mental depression, as I had suffered for years from morbidness, until life seemed to hold little light or joy for me. I had from childhood attended church and read and studied the Bible faithfully, but until I learned in Christian Science how to apply the truth found in the Bible, I found no help for the solution of my daily problems. I had, through an accident, lost the use of one of my legs, and for several years my health had been failing. I was told by many physicians that I was twenty per cent below par in every way and would never be able to walk without my crutches.

A friend told me of Christian Science and I went to a practitioner although I had no money to pay for the treatments nor to buy the Christian Science textbook, but the practitioner told me that when I was able to work I could pay for both. Through the help of this practitioner and my earnest reading of Science and Health and the Bible I began at once to improve. In a short time I was able to eat anything and all that I wanted. My circulation became normal, the morbidness was replaced by a sense of joy and happiness, and in a short time I was able to discard my crutches and walk as freely as any one, although my leg had been perfectly stiff. I became entirely normal in every faculty and function and was soon able to begin to earn my living, and have since earned enough to pay all my bills and live comfortably.

Words cannot express the gratitude that I feel for Christian Science nor for the debt we owe to Mrs. Eddy for showing us how to use this truth.

J. W. DOOLEY, Santa Anita, Calif.

It is now some two and a half years since Christian Science was first brought to my notice. My mother was said to be suffering from an incurable disease, and on hearing of this doctrine which I was told healed the sick, I immediately sought to know more about it. I was directed to the nearest reading room, and on borrowing a copy of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," I quickly became interested in the subject and from that day to this I have regularly attended the services and studied the Lesson-Sermon daily, and have been able on many occasions to apply the truth to some of my daily problems, with marked and beneficial results. I am extremely grateful to all those who have helped me to a better understanding of this beautiful religion, and I am grateful for improved general health, the healing of sprained ankles and one or two minor physical troubles of a more or less lifelong character. As for my dear mother, I have been enabled to place her with loving friends who are daily helping her to reflect more and more of divine Love, and a marked improvement in her general condition and character has already taken place. Certain physical inconveniences and discomforts, said to be incidental to her condition, have been overcome on the two occasions when these claims manifested themselves, and for these healings on her account I am deeply grateful.

I would like to relate an experience concerning a claim of possible unemployment. Last autumn, while in a situation that I had occupied for over three years, I was offered an administrative and progressive post in another firm. The new work seemed full of promise and, after a good deal of quiet mental work about it, in which I received the loving help of a friend, I accepted the offer and resigned the position I then held. Within one month of my commencing with the new firm, however, I was told that their plans for growth and expansion had fallen through and they asked me to make my own arrangements as they now had no vacancy for me. At first, I confess I felt a bit upset and disappointed, but in a short time ceased to feel any further fear or anxiety for the future, knowing that as "day by day the manna fell," so, as my needs arose, they would be met by divine Love. There had been a mutual probationary period of three months agreed to between us before entering upon the new work, so that I found my immediate needs were already met. Nevertheless, in accordance with the desire of my employers (who were not Scientists) I placed my name upon several employment agencies' lists and inserted an advertisement in our daily newspaper, The Christian Science Monitor. Though I had many interviews with prospective employers, nothing came of them, until the very last week of my "three months," when an opportunity presented itself of rendering temporary secretarial assistance for a week or ten days to a Christian Scientist; so that before I had actually left one post there was another ready for me. I entered upon my new duties the very next morning with joy and gratitude, and at the end of the time specified I was asked to continue for a further period, and so the time went on until nearly ten weeks had elapsed, when I was given a week's notice, as the work I was engaged upon had come to an end. During that week the way again opened for fresh work, and I entered upon this immediately. It has been a wonderful experience and I am more thankful than I can say for the valuable lessons it has taught me. I am also grateful that I have been permitted to pass on this wonderful truth to others and have had the pleasure of seeing them benefited in various ways. Truly, "God is good;" and "his mercy endureth for ever."—(Miss) BLANCHE W. EVANS, London, England.

I wish to express my gratitude for the healing I received through Christian Science. I had gone through two operations for tubercular peritonitis, and the doctors said I could not live over three weeks. I was so weak I could hardly walk, but after taking up Christian Science, in three weeks I was able to do my housework. I am now a well woman, and have gained twenty-two pounds in two months. I am grateful to all those who have helped me in this wonderful teaching of Mrs. Eddy's.

Christian Science first attracted me as a means of physical healing. After submitting to two surgical operations for a misplaced organ and finding only temporary relief, my attention was called to Christian Science by a friend who had been healed in Science. She stated that I could be healed, and as I was suffering excruciating pain, for which hypodermics of morphine had to be administered in increasing doses, I gladly sought the aid of a practitioner. My healing was not instantaneous. I had much to overcome. I had been a trained nurse and my father a physician and surgeon, so my thought was filled with materia medica ideas; but through the loving help of the practitioner these thoughts were put out and in their place the thought of the perfect man of God's creating was installed.

Words are inadequate to express my gratitude to God for this healing and many others that I have had since taking up the study of Christian Science. All that I am, or have, I owe to Science, as the doctor stated I could not survive many more of the attacks I was subject to. I am proving daily that no matter what erroneous condition may arise, if we turn to God understandingly for His help, He never fails. The spiritual uplift I have received is even greater cause for gratitude than my physical healing, for the Bible was a closed book to me, until "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy unlocked its spiritual meaning. I am truly grateful to God, to our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, and to all who have been the means through which good has come to me.

"Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven," we read in Matthew's gospel. I feel that one way in which I can obey this command is to send in my written testimony, knowing that it will help to light the way for others to glorify Truth by demonstration. As our Leader says on page 490 of Science and Health, "The scientifically Christian explanations of the nature and origin of man destroy all material sense with immortal testimony." Jesus made a perfect demonstration over error when in the wilderness, and on several other occasions when he was alone with God, and since I have been living for the past two years where there are no other Scientists near and no services to attend, being alone with God I have had occasion many times to demonstrate, as I could not call a practitioner when there seemed to be a need.

When our second son came, an almost painless birth took place and I was up the next day and within a very short time was doing all of my own work. A sense of pain and fever was manifested when our oldest little boy was cutting his teeth but it was met inside of fifteen minutes. At one time when a sense of sickness continued to manifest itself in our little son it seemed as if I would have to telegraph a practitioner for help, but I listened for the still, small voice of Truth, and the words of this hymn came to me (Hymnal, p. 180):—

What is thy birthright, man,
Child of the perfect One!

and immediately all doubt and fear were banished from thought, and shortly the demonstration was made. When the baby was but three weeks old there was a manifestation of bowel trouble, which continued for several days. One night the suggestion was made that material means ought to be used, as the other members of our family are not Scientists. I knew that Mind governs all action and governs it harmoniously, and the trouble was met the next morning before a material remedy could be obtained. Many other erroneous suggestions have been met and overcome for myself and the little ones, and for this understanding of the protective power of the truth as taught by Christ Jesus and given to the world by our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, I am indeed grateful and wish to express my gratitude by deeds rather than mere words.

Several years ago, while working for a large piano firm in the capacity of outside solicitor, I came into the store from a morning's work of making calls and remarked to the manager that I had walked so fast when I realized that I was late in keeping my appointment with him that I had a pain in my side. He earnestly replied, "There is no pain in your side; it is only a belief." Not understanding what he meant nor knowing what I was saying, I replied that I believed I would turn Christian Scientist and say, "I have no pain," and have none. He assented that that would be right. I instantly realized that I had no further sense of pain, and I wondered at the incident. At that time I had never read a word of Christian Science literature and knew nothing of its teaching, other than the ordinary careless, critical remarks thoughtlessly made in ridicule by uninterested people.

The seed of Truth had fallen on fertile soil, however, and the one who had voiced the truth that had healed, watered the sprouting thought by presenting me a few days later with a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, requesting me to read it. It was with a mingled thought of interest, partly because of my confidence in the honor and honesty of the giver and partly through curiosity, that I started to read. At first it seemed a jumbled mass of words. I remember the first clear thought that I discerned was, "Evil has no power, no intelligence, for God is good, and therefore good is infinite, is All" (Science and Health, p. 398). The latter statement puzzled me much, but the statement, "God is good," seemed so simple and plain and explained a question which had bothered me greatly, for since a child I had been held in terror by the belief that God punishes His children, and this statement comforted me.

Gradually I learned that when seemingly difficult problems presented themselves, solace was gained by reading this little book, and interest grew until I found myself occasionally attending the Christian Science services. Then one day when a friend taunted me about wearing glasses after becoming a Scientist,—which name I humbly told her I knew I was not then worthy to be called, but hoped some day to be,—I awoke to the opportunity of reliance on the infinitude of good for healing, and it was then that I read with a new interest and purpose. I laid off the glasses and clung to the scientific statement of being, found on page 468 of the textbook, and as I read could demonstrate sight—at first seemingly painfully and slowly, but within three weeks perfectly and with ease. This was seven years ago, and I have never had glasses on since nor needed to have them on, although an eye specialist had told me years before that I would always have to wear them. I am most grateful for this proof of infinite good.

I should like to express my gratitude for Christian Science through the Sentinel, since it is one of the avenues given us by our Leader, for sharing with others the good that has come into our own experience. Christian Science has been our only physician now for several years, and we have had many proofs of its healing power. Not long ago my little daughter was taken ill with influenza, accompanied by high fever, croupy cough, and complete loss of voice. I was far from home at the time, and among relatives who are greatly opposed to Christian Science, so I telephoned a practitioner for help, as my own fears seemed very great. All of the conditions yielded quickly and readily to treatment, with the exception of the cough and loss of voice.

Finally I wrote a practitioner in a distant city asking for further help. This was joyfully given, and I was directed to the definition of children, as given to us by Mrs. Eddy on page 582 of Science and Health: "The spiritual thoughts and representatives of Life, Truth, and Love." An understanding of the fact that "representatives of Life, Truth, and Love" can only reflect qualities of Life, Truth, and Love, and that cough and loss of voice are not such qualities, completely healed her of every discordant condition.

I am so grateful to Mrs. Eddy for showing us through her writings, that the teachings of the Bible are practical and usable now, and need only be understood to be demonstrated. I am very grateful, too, to the practitioners who have helped me to a better understanding of this truth. I am grateful for class instruction, for our literature, and for every avenue that our Leader has given us for our advancement.

I am grateful to God for leading me to study the book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy. I did not read it with any thought that it would benefit me physically, as I knew nothing whatever about Christian Science, and the Bible was a closed book to me. My joy was great when I found myself healed of constant headaches, depression, and a fear of death. I look forward eagerly for the Sentinel and Journal, and the Lesson-Sermons are a daily help. Truly I have been born again; old thoughts are passing away, and new and better ones are taking their place, bringing me health and happiness. Fatigue is an old enemy that study of the truth has destroyed. I have proved that "they that wait upon the Lord . . . shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk, and not faint." The miracles of Christ Jesus I now understand were the result of his perfect understanding of divine law. I know that as I progress in the study of the Bible and Christian Science every discordant condition will disappear, for they who truly seek shall surely find the "pearl of great price," which is spiritual understanding. I hope this testimony will benefit some weary searcher for truth.

Mrs. J. S. Sykes, Fixby, Huddersfield, England.

I am very grateful to Christian Science, for it has been such a help to me. Through it I have learned to love instead of hate my neighbor, and by getting hate, resentment, and fear out of my consciousness I have found health. I was suffering from several different claims, one of them being nervous indigestion. I had doctored for years with the best physicians, trying to get relief but was getting worse, for I could not eat anything without pain. After going to a practitioner, however, I was healed very quickly and could eat anything I wished without any suffering. Numerous other complaints left, with the exception of an organic trouble which seemed very severe, and at times I got very discouraged, but know that if I had been healed quickly of all claims I would not have studied so hard. I tried to do my own mental work and although I was better, at times I could hardly stand the pain. In the summer of 1919 I again asked help from a practitioner. The healing came and has been permanent. I find that I cannot be grateful enough to God for this proof of His ever present love and willingness to help His children in all times of trouble and distress.

Mrs. W. E. Pike, Webster Grove, Mo.

I gladly take this opportunity to express my gratitude for what Christian Science has done for me. In the summer of 1918 I was suffering so much from rheumatism that it was difficult for me to walk. Besides this, I had a feeling of weariness and discouragement. Relatives believed I had kidney trouble, and taking everything together I was in a very bad condition mentally and physically when I turned to Christian Science. With the help of a practitioner all these ailments have been overcome, and to-day I am a well man.—P. A. Young, Minneapolis, Minn.

With a deep feeling of gratitude I confirm my husband's testimony.—Mrs. P. A. Young.

Signs of the Times

[L. C. Little in Chicago (Ill.) News]

John Jordan is quite right in saying that the way to Americanize America is to send children to the public schools. He omits a rather important detail, though. The public schools must themselves be Americanized first. They must be restored to their old ideal function. They must be institutions of learning, places where children gather to be taught, educated, developed; not places where they are herded to be handled, examined, vaccinated, turned into clinical material.

Public schools have ceased to be public the last few years; they have come to be owned by a school of medicine; they open on its signal; they close at its command. Every child in them is under absolute control of medical officials who probably have no title to be officials, in the first place, if the laws were searched and correctly construed. In the second place, these officials do not belong to the teaching force, and if they have duties anywhere, they are not in the schoolroom.

De-Germanizing is what the public schools now sadly need. The American who is brought up with no sense of the sacredness of the person of a freeman ceases to be a freeman; he is on the way to serfdom and to submission, after a few generations, to the knout of his master.

[San Jose (Calif.) Mercury Herald]

In the great spiritual universe God works in silence. And the words "spiritual universe" are here not meant to designate the life in the next world or in some other state of existence, but are intended to refer to the spiritual life as distinguished from the material—the mere physical existence—here or elsewhere in creation. God's real messages come to the spirit of man noiselessly, not by spoken word or even the printed page, but directly to the individual heart and conscience. The message that will call men away from evil and elevate and purify their hearts, that can heal them body and soul, and can transform their lives from the inharmonious, aimless, sinful, almost useless things which they are, into beauty, harmony, purposeful strength, happiness, and heaven, will come in no Sinaian thunders. Such messages come silently to the soul straight from the infinite, spiritual, sentient life of the creator.

[Rabbi Lee J. Levinger in The Biblical World]

To those of us who have had the privilege of serving with the United States Army abroad, religious unity, cooperation between denominations, is more than a far-off ideal. We know under what circumstances and to what extent it is feasible, and just how it deepens and broadens the religious spirit in both chaplain and soldier. We have passed beyond the mutual tolerance of the older liberalism to the mutual helpfulness of the newer devoutness. Our common ground is no longer the irreducible minimum of doctrine which we share; it is the practical maximum of service which we can render together.

[Waterloo (Iowa) Courier]

At the Monday night meeting this question was asked: "What would happen to business if men ran their business as they do their religion?" That's a fair question; it ought to be answered. If there is any virtue or substantial basis for the Christian religion then it is worth being used rather than made merely an incidental convenience. If there is nothing in it, why spend money on it? Either the Christian religion is the biggest thing in the world or it is a fake; there can be no argument on that proposition. If it is a fake, then why spend hundreds of millions of dollars yearly in keeping alive and functioning a fallacy? If it is something real, vital, potential, helpful, in the name of all that is logical and rational, why not give it a chance to produce results and dividends? The church is in the last ditch. It's got to shake itself, get into the game and produce, or else get out of the way and give something else a chance.

Letters of Appreciation

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. Extracts from such letters follow:

I HAVE been a reader of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR for a number of years and I am free to say that no publication comes to my home bringing with it such moral and intellectual satisfaction as does the MONITOR. The beginning of its publication marks an epoch in the spiritual development of America, and Mrs. Eddy is entitled to the appreciation and gratitude of every American citizen who earnestly desires the improvement of our people, because in her foresight she provided for this great national and international publication.

WOULD like to express my grateful thanks for such a newspaper as THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR. It has been my privilege to have it since the first issue. I would not be without it. It is a daily feast of good things—good, truthful, reliable news, and an education in itself along all lines of thought. How could it be otherwise when our dear Leader has said in "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany" (p. 353), "The object of the Monitor is to injure no man, but to bless all mankind." And so the MONITOR gives out its message of blessing to all the world.

IT is superfluous for me to say that you edit one of the great papers of the world. You have discovered news values in the report of the events of the day and your interpretations remind me of the values of publicists and statesmen, who stand above factions and conflicting material interests. You are familiar with the old saying, "Every question has its right side and its wrong side and its inside." It seems to me you have a scent for the inside of the public questions of the day.

"Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" and all other published writings of Mary Baker Eddy are listed on the outside back cover page of this Sentinel.

Christian Science Sentinel

Established, 1898, by Mary Baker Eddy. Published weekly, containing articles, editorials, and special current information regarding the Christian Science movement, also testimonies of healing. VOLUME XXII JULY 17, 1920 NUMBER 46

Love and Law

ROBERT RAMSEY

PAUL in his epistle to the Romans defines Christianity by writing, "Love is the fulfilling of the law." If Paul meant the material law, then the love which fulfills it must also be material or personal. This sense of so-called love is illustrated in the bravery of an animal defending its young, and, when analyzed, is found to be grounded on the fear of death. In I John we read, "Perfect love casteth out fear;" therefore personal love based on fear is the counterfeit or exact opposite of divine Love. In the same way material law can be proved to be merely the counterfeit of spiritual law. It is therefore clear that Paul did not refer to personal love and material law. In fact, since Spirit is infinite, these have only a supposititious existence in belief. To replace the belief in personal love by the idea of divine Love is to rise from the material to the spiritual and so fulfill the law of Spirit.

Paul's statement can be inverted to read, "The fulfilling of the law is love." On page 17 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy we read, "Love is reflected in love." A dictionary defines law as, "Principle in action." A comparison of these three quotations shows how closely love is related to law. Law is one necessary evidence of the dawn of understanding. In Science and Health (p. 505) we read, "Understanding is the line of demarcation between the real and unreal." The law, therefore, based on the Ten Commandments of Moses, should indicate the line of demarcation between spiritual law and the so-called material law. In its inception law is always an attempt to express divine Love; for, when men gathered together, human laws were made to govern, protect, and insure justice amongst themselves. Government, protection, and justice are the expression of Principle; therefore if human law fails to express divine Love it is simply because of the insinuation of material belief. Whenever law has departed from the spirit of Love and has degenerated to the letter of materialism, it has departed from expressing Principle.

Christ Jesus in the Sermon on the Mount clearly drew the line between the law of love and the "ye have heard that it hath been said" formula of material sense. The healing work of Jesus was the essential expression of divine Love. Only through the healing of sickness and sin can divine Love be known in human experience. It was because of this that Jesus referred John the Baptist to his works rather than his words in proof of his Christhood. The demonstration of healing illustrates spiritual law, love, on the human plane by proving, in a degree, that perfect man is the result of perfect Principle. To the multitude the result of the works done by Jesus was conclusive, for almost invariably we read that "they glorified the God of Israel." It is a proof of the divinity of love when it leads thought up to God, divine Love.

Jesus stated another quality of divine Love when he said, "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you." Divine Love is therefore universal, it leaves no one out. Since God is the universal Father, the child of God must reflect Love, and this is the law of being. Only the one who reflects this universal love, who sees the "fulfilling of the law" as the actuality of the manifestation of being, has the protection of the Father's love. Conversely, only the hater can suffer from the hate of others. Mortals simply suffer in belief from the so-called material law of general belief, because they lack the understanding of the universal nature of Love. When they gain this understanding they do not take it down to the mortal level and use it as a human weapon of defense, but the true concept of Love lifts one above the mists of general belief. In the proportion that this is accomplished, mortality vanishes in the presence of immortality.

Jesus said, "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." When the concept of divine Love is proved and man is seen scientifically as the child of God, of Love, the so-called law of general belief is proved powerless. On page 567 of Science and Health we read: "To infinite, ever-present Love, all is Love, and there is no error, no sin, sickness, nor death. Against Love, the dragon warreth not long, for he is killed by the divine Principle. Truth and Love prevail against the dragon because the dragon cannot war with them. Thus endeth the conflict between the flesh and Spirit."

Ideas

SARAH WOODALL

ON page 88 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy says: "Ideas are emanations from the divine Mind. Thoughts, proceeding from the brain or from matter, are offshoots of mortal mind; they are mortal material beliefs. Ideas are spiritual, harmonious, and eternal." The student of Christian Science does not always find it easy to separate from himself or others the "offshoots of mortal mind" in the shape of discordant, sick, or sinful beliefs, but one student has found it easier to do this when comparing the real or spiritual man with the correct working out of a problem in mathematics. It is self-evident that there is only one correct answer to any problem. It may be that the correct answer can be achieved by working out the problem in different ways, but the working out of the problem must in each case be carried out in accordance with the rule or law of mathematics that forms the basis of the solution. This problem may be worked out by a number of students, but only those who are employing the rule or law will gain the correct answer.

Some students may, perhaps, either through ignorance or erroneous concepts of this Principle, have come to a wrong conclusion. What difference does that make to the correct answer? It does not affect it in the least. If a hundred pupils in a class after much labor and study had failed to grasp the truth underlying that particular problem in mathematics, and no one had arrived at the correct answer, the truth about it would remain perfect, demonstrable, and unaffected in any way by ignorance or misapplication, and the teacher would know this and be undisturbed by the failures of the pupils to give the correct answer.

In the same way God's idea remains spiritual, harmonious, and eternal in spite of the mortal material beliefs that arise through ignorance of the Principle of all true being. It does not matter how many people believe that a man is blind or deaf or lame,—it does not make the slightest difference to the real man, who is now and always has been the image and likeness of God. The forever fact remains true and nothing can change or alter it in any way. "Now are we the sons of God" is the absolute truth, no matter how many mortal material beliefs try to reverse the fact. It should also be remembered that as God expresses Himself through His idea, this idea is necessarily perfect and expresses the nature of God, for man apart from God would be nothing. But the man of God's creating is the only man there is, and that man has never been able to express anything but God.

There may be a variety of reasons for a failure to work out the correct answer, but it will be safe to say that in most cases it is due to the student's becoming separated in belief from the particular rule that governs the problem. In some cases it may be but a slight deviation from this rule, but even that is sufficient to prevent the correct conclusion being reached. In the same way, any seeming failure to overcome some particular discord is often due to the belief that man can be separated from God, a belief which is an "offshoot of mortal mind," for in reality Principle is one with its idea and can never be separated.

To refer once again to the simile of the teacher and his class, does the teacher for one moment feel anxious for the safety of the rule which his pupils have failed to demonstrate correctly? No. The wise teacher knows there is only one remedy for error of this nature, and that is a closer study and more faithful application of the rule. So the student of Christian Science need not feel disturbed at his own or others' apparent failure quickly to demonstrate harmony. In Science and Health (p. 454) Mrs. Eddy reminds us that "patience must 'have her perfect work.'" The rule must be understood in order to be demonstrated. In proportion to our faithfulness in thoroughly rejecting all offshoots of mortal mind, these products of ignorance and wrong thinking, will the emanations from the divine Mind take their place, and the inevitable result will be the correct working out of the problem, whatever it may be. Then it will be seen that all the wrong thinking about man has never affected the real man in any way, and all that can ever really happen is the unfoldment of the eternal perfection of man made in the image and likeness of God.

"Father and Mother"

G. HAMILTON BERRY

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE is the revelation of Truth to this age, and therefore requires humility and inspiration to be understood. The student needs humility, whereby he is able to cast out of his thought all foolish pride and erroneous theories based on the reality of matter and evil, even that "wisdom of this world" which Paul says "is foolishness with God," and needs inspiration and divine hunger and thirst after righteousness, which are true prayer and never remain unanswered.

This wonderful Science shows how the Bible, when understood spiritually, contains the solution for every problem that perplexes humanity, and teaches how we can make this knowledge of practical value in our daily life. One of the first steps is to rediscover for ourselves the correct conception of God, Principle, as our loving Father and Mother. For many centuries mankind has been suffering from a false belief of Deity as an anthropomorphic Being—a kind of glorified man of austerity and fierce retribution, the creator of a visible material universe and of men and women full of evil traits and tendencies. With such an opinion, is it any wonder that humanity is crying out for something better, and that, as such erroneous thinking produces its fruits of sickness and despair, many are at length willing to swallow their own prejudices and learn something of the glory of Principle as taught in Christian Science?

Any one who is willing to be humble, to become as a little child, to study the textbook of Christian Science, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, and to put its teachings into practice so far as understood, will find healing from whatever form of discord claims to be operative at the moment. This is not a mere extravagant assertion, but a fact already proved in the personal experience of thousands of Christian Scientists all over the world, and provable by any sincere seeker who is willing to advance step by step. Mere cleverness is not necessary in this study. Mrs. Eddy states most emphatically on page 10 of the Preface to Science and Health, "No intellectual proficiency is requisite in the learner, but sound morals are most desirable."

The basic fact that Christian Science teaches about God is that God is good, infinite, All-in-all, Mind, Principle, Father and Mother, and that all these terms are interchangeable. From this it follows that man created in the image and likeness of God, as recorded in Genesis 1:25 and 26, must be spiritual and not material as commonly conceived. The image or idea of such a creator must express intelligence, goodness, love, correctness, and harmony, and cannot by any possibility express such opposites as ignorance, evil, hate, sin, or discord, since no such qualities are to be found in the true concept of God as our Father-Mother. Obviously, since God is good and made all, and as "God saw every thing that he had made, and, behold, it was very good," an evil, material creation simply cannot exist, and its only claim to existence is through the false belief of mortal human consciousness. This gigantic delusion is even now being exposed and reduced to its native nothingness by the irresistible light ceaselessly streaming forth from Principle, as revealed in Christian Science.

This tenderness and love of our Father-Mother God is available to all who will turn to the light. Whosoever takes advantage of this great fact now and clings to it despite all the suggestions of mortal mind, finds the key to all health, happiness, protection, and holiness; and the resultant proofs will unfold to him in exact proportion to his faithfulness in realizing the truth about creation and rejecting whatever would claim to be a consciousness unlike Love.

The Bible, studied in the light of Christian Science, becomes a new book—full of radiant love, understandable coherence, and priceless promise. No longer can old theology terrify with its dismal misconceptions. The light has come to this age, and nothing can extinguish its glorious rays. As Mrs. Eddy says on page 256 of Science and Health: "Progress takes off human shackles. The finite must yield to the infinite. Advancing to a higher plane of action, thought rises from the material sense to the spiritual, from the scholastic to the inspirational, and from the mortal to the immortal. All things are created spiritually. Mind, not matter, is the creator. Love, the divine Principle, is the Father and Mother of the universe, including man."

The Seamless Robe

MARY L. HOOPER

IN studying the Bible text John 19:23, 24 and comparing it with what Mrs. Eddy has said in that connection in her various works, we may be spiritually helped in finding the wonderful unity of this subject. There is only one Mind,—God. To represent that Mind it takes all of God's ideas, His full creation, man and the universe. Not the greatest nor the least part of this infinite intelligence can be left out if the whole is to be expressed. Oneness is entirety, all. This is God's word to us, down through the ages. Jesus gave this message to mankind. He gave it to all and for all. In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy we read (p. 242): "The vesture of Life is Truth. According to the Bible, the facts of being are commonly misconstrued, for it is written: 'They parted my raiment among them, and for my vesture they did cast lots.' The divine Science of man is woven into one web of consistency without seam or rent. Mere speculation or superstition appropriates no part of the divine vesture, while inspiration restores every part of the Christly garment of righteousness."

Christ Jesus' vesture was without seam. Our Master was clothed with righteousness, the Christ, Truth. No one can approach this Christ-mind thinking, "I will take the teachings of Jesus and choose that which I like for myself." We must accept all to receive the inspiration of His good tidings. In Miscellany (p. 206) Mrs. Eddy says, "Schisms, imagination, and human beliefs are not parts of Christian Science; they darken the discernment of Science; they divide Truth's garment and cast lots for it." When I began to investigate Christian Science I soon saw this. One could not look at a beautiful face and say, "I will drink in its loveliness but I will not say I take in the expression of the eyes." He simply has not seen the face. I have found when I accepted Principle as the Leader of the Christian Science movement has shown it to us,—the same old story of God, the Christ-message,—I accepted all she worked out for us. As soon as I began to divide the "garment of praise" I lost touch with its import and my spiritual perception of her revelation became clouded. Hence I stand fast for the entirety of her work.

This is shown to us—our part to do—in Science and Health (p. 142) where Mrs. Eddy says: "Anciently the followers of Christ, or Truth, measured Christianity by its power over sickness, sin, and death; but modern religions generally omit all but one of these powers,—the power over sin. We must seek the undivided garment, the whole Christ, as our first proof of Christianity, for Christ, Truth, alone can furnish us with absolute evidence." There is only one way to attain the complete glory of the gospel of Christ. It is through Love. If an error suggests itself as our thought and we as Christian Scientists cast it out, holding fast to Love only in its place, we can at once see the spiritual truth about man. But in the hour of temptation if we allow hate, jealousy, pride, fear, anger to stay with us, then is lost for us to that extent the Christ-robe of righteousness.

Our Leader's words to us in her Message for 1901 (p. 26) chasten, sweeten my mortal sense and open to me the way she trod heavenward. "I have passed through deep waters to preserve Christ's vesture unrent; then, when land is reached and the world aroused, shall the word popularity be pinned to the seamless robe, and they cast lots for it? God forbid! Let it be left to such as see God—to the pure in spirit, and the meek that inherit the earth; left to them of a sound faith and charity, the greatest of which is charity—spiritual love." Can we take the spirit of her message, you and I, as we tread our pathway out into the oneness of divine Mind, preserving, as she did, "Christ's vesture unrent"? We must, to gain the truth of Christian Science and Jesus' Christianity and our Father's gift of love.

On Being Alone

MYRTLE L. NOBLE

MANY a so-called mortal in working out his own salvation has to overcome that phase of error called loneliness. Recently in reading our Leader's Message to The Mother Church for 1901 (p. 20) this statement stood out very clearly: "The Christian Scientist is alone with his own being and with the reality of things." As there is only the truth about God, or Principle, and His creation, then there is only the true sense of being alone. Principle is being or cause, and man is the expression or effect of this one and only cause. As cause and effect cannot be separated, any more than the sun and its rays, therefore truly to be alone is really only the proof of man's oneness with Principle, which is all and includes all.

What if one should seem to stand alone in working out a so-called problem of home, business, or state, as far as what mortal man calls friends are concerned? We know in mathematics that twice two is four, always has been, and always will be. Nobody disputes the fact, and it would not matter if so-called friends did; that would never change it to five or influence one's knowing the fact one iota. We would not be afraid to tell them the truth and stand firmly, knowing that Principle is eternally governing. As Mrs. Eddy states in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 102): "Science has inaugurated the irrepressible conflict between sense and Soul. Mortal thought wars with this sense as one that beateth the air, but Science outmasters it, and ends the warfare. This proves daily that 'one on God's side is a majority.'"

Rest

VIVIAN M. KUENZLI

MATERIAL medicine says: Lay aside your business cares, your household worries. Go to another climate and find change, relaxation, rest,—that is, go and find it for yourself, for we haven't it to give and cannot even direct your footsteps in the search. Students and philosophers, family and friends, are ever ready with the word of advice, "Go and rest!" Knowing well that bodily inaction is not rest, and that the effort to coax or browbeat the human mind into believing that the weary treadmill of material thinking can ever lead to peace or point the way to happiness, the thinkers of this age are being made ready for the acceptance of that which has been thrust aside through weary centuries. Students of Christian Science, whether so-called intellectual giants or those to whom Paul might be understood as having reference when he speaks of God choosing "the foolish things of the world to confound the wise," are daily proving in some measure the truth of Mrs. Eddy's statement in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" beginning on page 519, "The highest and sweetest rest, even from a human standpoint, is in holy work." Here we need to note that "holy" means "of highest spiritual purity," and in the effort to make our work of to-day, whatever it may be, measure up to that standard, great joy is experienced in the realization that the rest which we feared might be found only after what is called death may be demonstrated here and now.

Digitized by Google

"A man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief"—but not hopelessly acquiescent nor acknowledging their supremacy, Jesus delivered his loving invitation to all humanity, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Error, a mistaken sense, seems always to be saying, "Come unto me, and I will give you—everything that the world has to offer, and the glories thereof"—but never rest. Christ Jesus, standing apart from all that materiality claims to be, ready to rise entirely above all belief in or acknowledgment of it as having power or existence, knowing that mere flesh and bones would soon be lost from sight and reach of tired hearts everywhere, issued his ringing message, vibrant with the reality of what we call mother love and fatherhood.

Never in the history of the ages had one been found who dared to offer to humanity such complete rest. Never, with this notable exception, had one been known who could find it so completely for himself. Jesus could offer it, could promise it in all naturalness, because he had proved the possibility of overcoming the flesh. Later Mary Baker Eddy, having through consecration and revelation attained in a degree that Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus," gave to this age the true concept of rest. On page 387 of Science and Health she writes: "Who dares to say that actual Mind can be overworked? When we reach our limits of mental endurance, we conclude that intellectual labor has been carried sufficiently far; but when we realize that immortal Mind is ever active, and that spiritual energies can neither wear out nor can so-called material law trespass upon God-given powers and resources, we are able to rest in Truth, refreshed by the assurances of immortality, opposed to mortality."

Examination

EDNA DEU PREE NELSON

THE word "examination" is so frequently before the thought these days, in the press and on the tongue, that a few words as to its true meaning is not amiss. In the first chapter of Genesis we read: "And God said, Let there be a firmament in the midst of the waters, and let it divide the waters from the waters. And God made the firmament, and divided the waters which were under the firmament from the waters which were above the firmament: and it was so." In this statement is the rule by which every act, thought, and word can be weighed. On page 505 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy has stated the meaning of the Scriptural verse in part as follows: "Spirit imparts the understanding which uplifts consciousness and leads into all truth," and again, in the same paragraph, "Understanding is the line of demarcation between the real and unreal."

Where the line of departure begins in the separation of that which is good from that which is not good, true examination begins, and spiritual understanding is simply the ability to examine and dissect every thought as to its fitness to be a son of God. This is the examination which comes from God. We find that in the beginning God made everything good. True examination is certainly included in that beginning and is good. This brings one to the conclusion that God is all good and knows nothing but good, that He is infinite cause, and what God knows about examination is all there is to it.

All the learning one can have is what comes from Mind, and although it may seem to come from books or college, it really is not true knowledge unless it bears the imprint of the Mind which is the only intelligence. Is it not greater for a man to know that God is his health and to experience that knowing in the joy of health expressed than to have a theoretical knowledge of all the material sciences and a fear of indigestion that keeps him constantly fretting and joyless? Which of the two is true knowledge? Of course, in Christian Science one learns to make the most of his opportunity, and, furthermore, he finds the divine idea of opportunity, which is without limit. He should for that reason be a good student, a good worker, a good thinker, because of what he knows about God.

Many a student becomes disturbed over school examinations because he fears he will be asked a question which he cannot answer correctly. Here is where he needs to apply and demonstrate the knowledge of what examination is. Mind, the only cause, is expressed, and this expression is man. The line of demarcation, or firmament, or spiritual understanding, whatever one wants to call it, begins right here to separate the belief about mathematics, English, history, logic, chemistry, hydraulics, from the truth about these subjects and finds that the manifestation of Mind is all there is to mathematics, English, history, chemistry, and so on. We find in the Bible and Science and Health that God is omnipresent. His expression must also be omnipresent. What He knows about any subject must be present also, or else our logic is awry. God knows through all eternity every question and answer, for both question and answer can be found only in infinite Mind. Being all Mind, God is Teacher, Dean, Professor, for He embraces all the thinking that goes to make up teaching and instructing. If one is understandingly affirming God to be his Teacher or Professor, he will see God expressed to him in the way he can best understand, and his examination will consequently be a beautiful experience, nothing more or less than an unfoldment of good.

Examination viewed in this light will prove to be "God with us," and not God absent from us. One might experience it as a question on a subject with which he was perfectly familiar; it might be revealed in a correct answer to a question with which he was not familiar; he might find that the one thing he had reviewed before coming to the classroom was presented to him for solution. Assuredly, if one is thinking of God as all and capable of supplying every need, this will be expressed, whether it be a correct answer to a problem in calculus, or finances with which to finish a college career. God is omnipresent and expressed, it matters not whether the expression be called understanding during a school examination or man.

Who asks a question in mathematics? Is it a person? It must be intelligence. Where would one find a question about mathematics if it were not for the fact that there is one governing Principle? If a student were asked a question on any subject, by the most learned professor, it would not be a question unless it could be answered according to some rule governing that subject. This brings one to the conclusion that the question presupposes the answer and that there is only one kind of an answer to anything and that is the correct one, which is the only kind of an answer God knows. How long does it take God to answer a question? On page 504 of Science and Health is our reply: "The rays of infinite Truth, when gathered into the focus of ideas, bring light instantaneously, whereas a thousand years of human doctrines, hypotheses, and vague conjectures emit no such effulgence."

Does any one doubt God's ability to carry one successfully through either a school examination or any other examination? The Bible is replete with illustrations of God's help in giving the correct answer. Moses, when called to lead the children of Israel out of Egypt, did not fear that he would not be able to speak well before Pharaoh, for God said to him, "Now therefore go, and I will be with thy mouth, and teach thee what thou shalt say." Jesus said: "What man is there of you, whom if his son ask bread, will he give him a stone? Or if he ask a fish, will he give him a serpent? If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask him?" Again he said, "Ask, and it shall be given you." So, if one seeks the correct answer to a question in history, will he be given the answer to a question in mathematics? Of course not; for God, being infinite intelligence, knows the exact answer to every question, and only ignorance would give an incorrect answer. One certainly would not credit infinite intelligence with knowing anything at all about ignorance.

IF there is one statement of Jesus that is fixed in my thought more than another it is, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." From the time I first attended a Christian Science church as a small boy till now as a young man, I have read those words on the wall over the Readers' desks, and now I find them a help to keep me in the paths of righteousness. Many times when I have desired, in the error of discouragement, to quit some job or to stop short of the accomplishment of some purpose, the word "continue," has come to me and I have worked the harder to do my task in proving that my consciousness is filled with good thoughts to the exclusion of undesirable ones.

To continue means to abide or stay. We may abide or stay in the truth; and this means to hold to what we now know of Truth and reach out for more, which is progress. This also means that to continue is to go on, to go forward, to achieve. The goal is freedom and perfection.

Mrs. Eddy says in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 199), "The devotion of thought to an honest achievement makes the achievement possible." It matters not whether it is a private, state, or church affair that requires adjustment. As Christian Scientists, we have enlisted to do good, help others, and demonstrate the perfection of Principle. To do this we must "continue" to work as we are taught by our Leader, Mrs. Eddy. We must "continue" our support of all branches of Christian Science activity, and "continue" to look to the Christ rather than to personality for guidance. If we do this, harmony is achieved.

BECAUSE for me she wrought with marvelous care,
Can I the debt toss carelessly aside—
Content to feast in idleness and pride,
Unmindful of her fast, her ceaseless prayer?
Can I forget that sweet compassion rare
That stole across my night when longing cried?
Oh, tell me, shall I now this treasure hide,
This priceless pearl, so radiantly fair?

Bring all the tithes,—this was her daily creed,—
His storehouse fill that none may lack for meat,
Sang in her heart a clear, unbroken chant;
And in the solitude of darkest need
Sublime she stood, unfaltering, trustful, meek,
A Love-crowned woman, with uplifted lamp.

["The Power to Reform"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., June 7, 1920]

The love for good that is in every human heart is the bedrock on which character is built. It can never be entirely lost, for it constitutes that spark of spiritual power which enables a man to reach out toward divine Principle. It is the light that must burn until the perfect day of spiritual understanding. It bases every man's endeavor for reform and is the reason why the most apparently degraded creature can reform. Nevertheless, it lies out of sight and beyond the range of recognition while a man indulges in willful ignorance of Principle, revels in the pleasure and fears the pain of material sense.

There are many people in the world who have never heard of Principle, and who from their earliest days were not only left untaught concerning good, but were trained from childhood to follow evil ways. To them goodness as an aim would be unknown were it not for the existence of this spark of spiritual understanding, this latent capacity to choose the good, which makes reform possible. No man should, therefore, feel himself without hope in the world, no matter how far his acts and his thoughts have led him to conclude himself shut out from the straight way, because the "Light, which lighteth every man," can never be extinguished. This light is not a portion of the human or mortal mind, but is a reflection of the divine. It is the fact of man's spiritual existence which the human mind essays to counterfeit and hide. It is the direct reflection of divine Love, and what greater exemplification of Love can there be at this hour than the Science of Christianity which brings this comforting truth to the knowledge of mankind?

If at any time the human mind had desired salvation for itself the spiritual fact of man's relationship to God could not have been concealed, because at the moment of that desire the destruction of the counterfeit would have begun. Such a course would, however, have been impossible to this mind, because its very nature is ignorance of God, or Principle; consequently, it fights for its own sense of existence and inevitably resists the coming of the knowledge of God.

It can be seen, therefore, that the desire for reform is born of the fact that a man can reform, and can do so in spite of the material nature that is entirely opposed to his reformation. It can be seen also that while invisible to, and unknowable by the material mind, this ever active, ever living, idea of spiritual reality is power, and the only power, since it is the eternal fact of man's life as an idea of Mind. In his fight against the claims of evil, the individual learns the exact value, relatively, of the two opposing forces that he seems to be between and, if in real earnest, he will always prove that evil flees before the truth. Herein is found one of the priceless convictions which come to the Christian Scientist, the incontrovertible conviction that reform is possible, that one can turn from every evil way and find the longing for good to be one with omnipotence.

A desire for reform is, of course, the first necessity of salvation, and this is the desire born of man's real nature. Such desire receives direct spiritual power. Crime is canceled by reform. "If the evil is over in the repentant mortal mind," Mrs. Eddy says in the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 404), "while its effects still remain on the individual, you can remove this disorder as God's law is fulfilled and reformation cancels the crime." This declaration is simple and the way of escape made plain. It should be considered natural for one to turn from evil to good, and it will be so considered as the truth of man's being becomes better understood.

It is so considered already by those instructed in Christian Science. They understand also Mrs. Eddy's admonition against the unwisdom of delay. "Man's enslavement to the most relentless masters—passion, selfishness, envy, hatred, and revenge," she says on page 407 of Science and Health, "is conquered only by a mighty struggle. Every hour of delay makes the struggle more severe." Then on the same page and below, she supplies the comforting reassurance of a "sovereign panacea." "Here Christian Science is the sovereign panacea, giving strength to the weakness of mortal mind,—strength from the immortal and omnipotent Mind,—and lifting humanity above itself into purer desires, even into spiritual power and good-will to man."

Through the gradual or rapid reformation of the individuals composing the world, evil will be canceled for the whole world, and there is no other way. Until such reform takes place happiness will never be attained. Man's nature is spiritual and man's happiness cannot be found apart from Spirit. The notion that evil doing is real power and that it brings contentment and can satisfy is the illusion that the counterfeit of man is God's idea—man; and this illusion is the source of humanity's suffering. It was this mistaken notion concerning man's origin that caused the crucifixion of Jesus and that to-day leads men into the committal of deeds that must be repented of. Had men not been looking for the coming of a corporeal savior in the person of the promised Messiah, they would not have misunderstood Jesus' presentation of the saving Principle and would never have crucified the messenger of Truth.

There is always danger of repeating their mistake, for unless salvation is sought through reform, material sense will run its course unchecked, and it cannot understand Principle. It is, therefore, important to understand the naturalness of reform, to take into consideration the fact that the love for good is inherent in every heart, and the import of that fact. The way of Spirit is the way of absolute simplicity. Turning quite simply from evil to good, accepting the great simple fact that the divine Mind is the only reality, one rejects all the carnal mind's false pronouncements and relies on spiritual understanding alone. When this is accepted reformation has begun and sin is being canceled. Straightforward, persistent realization of the fact that because a man desires to reform he can reform, is the utilization of the "Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God."

[John M. Dean in The Knoxville (Tenn.) Sentinel]

Our critic approaches the entire question of Christian Science from a purely material standpoint, an attitude which is impossible in considering metaphysics; for it should be remembered that Christian Science interprets the Bible spiritually. Christian Scientists can in conscience acknowledge but one God. When Jesus said, "God is a Spirit; and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth," he sounded the death knell of materialism in religion. True, materialism dies hard, but nevertheless it dies. Christian Scientists frankly accept as true the spiritual account of creation as given in the first chapter of Genesis and the opening verses of the second chapter. The second or material account of creation, which follows, must be considered as allegorical in its nature, unless one chooses to accept this account instead of the first. Both we cannot have, for it must be evident that God, Spirit, never created man and the universe spiritually and then immediately remade them materially. Our critic can accept as his either of the two accounts named, but he cannot have both. The second account is obviously intended to portray the earthy nature of false belief in contradistinction to infinite truth. Spirit cannot create or coalesce with matter. Grapes are not gathered from thorns, or figs from thistles, any more to-day than they were when Jesus emphasized the incongruity of such thinking nineteen hundred years ago. Jesus also said, "Every city or house divided against itself shall not stand," therefore God's creation cannot be composed of such opposite qualities as Spirit and matter.

In the second place, our critic quotes from both the Bible and Science and Health isolated statements, stripped from their context. The futility and unfairness of such a method must be at once apparent. That the world is filled with sin will not be disputed by any Christian Scientist, for nothing but wrongdoing could have brought the world to its present condition. We do deny, however, that sin is God-created and an indestructible reality. If God is the author of sin, it is futile to attempt to destroy it, for "whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever," says the preacher. Is it not readily seen that realities are not subject to destruction? Destroy anything, and in doing so you establish its nothingness as an entity.

Jesus proved the unreal nature of sin and disease by destroying them, and in this way he fulfilled his mission. He came to "destroy the works of the devil [evil]," and certainly he could not even wish to destroy the works of God. A human personality, being the counterfeit of God's man, may permit himself to lay aside his sense of good for a sense of evil, but good itself can never degenerate. It is, like Christ, "the same yesterday, and to day and for ever." To deny this is to deny the permanency of salvation. That perfection could become imperfect is an unthinkable contradiction. The wise man sums up the whole matter in a few words: "God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions." Christian Scientists have no time to waste in advocating the might and permanency of these inventions, and for any Christian to do so presents a solecism. The eighth chapter of Romans makes exceedingly interesting reading in this connection.

Mrs. Eddy's book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" is a competent witness in its own behalf. No one need take the word of a critic as to its teachings, for it may be read or borrowed at Christian Science reading rooms and at most public libraries. To speak of Christian Science as "Eddyism" is a poor argument as well as in poor taste. Mrs. Eddy named her discovery Christian Science, and this is the term which Christian Scientists would thank their critics to use. That "there is no place for faith in Christian Science" is a new argument, for a frequent objection to Christian Scientists is based on their "excess" faith. However, in Christian Science, faith is not based on blind belief but on spiritual understanding.

[C. W. Hale in Richmond (Ind.) Item]

In a series of lectures given in Richmond several statements have been made pertaining to Christian Science which were at variance with its actual teachings and which would mislead your readers. These remarks indicate that the same material misinterpretation of the Bible that was taught and insisted upon by the accepted theology of Christ Jesus' time and which tried to thwart his teachings and regenerating work, is still manifested and believed in by theologians of to-day, and is bringing contradiction and confusion into human consciousness. Christian Science has revealed to mankind the true, accurate, demonstrable spiritual interpretation of the Scriptures, the same that Christ Jesus taught, which heals the sick and brings regeneration to the sinner.

The claim that Christian Science heals by the power of "continuous and persistent suggestion," and through "suggestion of the conscious to the subconscious mind," is wholly incorrect and not at all in conformity with the teachings of Christian Science as set forth in its textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and other authorized literature. It has been demonstrated repeatedly that human will is not only uncertain and changeable, but actually dangerous in its operation upon unsuspecting people. Christian Science healing is a definite, positive proof of the power and presence of God, divine Mind, and it is not in any sense dependent upon or influenced by human will power. This condition was discerned by Mrs. Eddy, and she proved beyond all question that it is the power of God that heals, and that the occult processes of the human mind are absolutely powerless to do good, and frequently hold people in the bondage of evil beliefs and influences. Realizing this, she has written in "Miscellaneous Writings" on page 118: "Human will must be subjugated. We cannot obey both God, good, and evil,—in other words, the material senses, false suggestions, self-will, selfish motives and human policy. We shall have no faith in evil when faith finds a resting-place and scientific understanding guides man. . . . Self-ignorance, self-will, self-righteousness, lust, covetousness, envy, revenge, are foes to grace, peace, and progress; they must be met manfully and overcome, or they will uproot all happiness."

The intimation that Christian Science is not based on the Bible and that it perverts the teachings of the Scriptures would indicate how little the critic really knows of Christian Science. The real fact of the matter is that Christian Science accepts the Bible unreservedly and without qualification, and puts into practical, demonstrable use what is taught therein.

The statement made that one does not need any books explanatory of the Scriptures, sounds strange coming from a theologian who probably spent several years studying commentaries on the Bible in a theological school. Every one knows that in those commentaries on the Bible, based upon a material interpretation of its teachings, there are countless contradictions and inconsistencies, and many vital truths are set aside as beyond the understanding of human beings and to be comprehended only in a future existence. In the textbook of Christian Science, which this critic criticizes so severely and seems to understand so little, there are no contradictions, and its spiritual interpretations of the Scriptures have been proved true in hundreds of thousands of cases by the test applied by Christ Jesus himself.

Realizing the fullness and the vast import of the proper spiritual understanding of the atonement, Mrs. Eddy included a full chapter on the "Atonement and Eucharist" in her principal work, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." Here she has made clear that the work of Christ Jesus goes farther than the ordinary understanding of it, and in demonstrating man's at-one-ment with God shows us how we, too, may prove our real relationship with God, and overcome all phases of evil.

In answer to the question, "Is there no sacrificial atonement?" Mrs. Eddy in "No and Yes" on page 33 has said: "The sacrifice of our blessed Lord is undeniable, and it was a million times greater than the brief agony of the cross; for that would have been insufficient to insure the glory his sacrifice brought and the good it wrought. . . . The real atonement—so infinitely beyond the heathen conception that God requires human blood to propitiate His justice and bring His mercy—needs to be understood. The real blood or Life of Spirit is not yet discerned. Love, bruised and bleeding yet mounting to the throne of glory in purity and peace, over the steps of uplifted humanity,—this is the deep significance of the blood of Christ. Nameless woe, everlasting victories, are the blood, the vital currents of Christ Jesus' life, purchasing the freedom of mortals from sin and death."

[Charles W. J. Tennant in London (England) Standard]

In a recent issue of The Standard there appeared an article entitled, "Hypnotism and Prejudice," in which Christian Science is referred to as a form of suggestion. This is not the case. Christian Science treatment is the utilization of the powers of the divine Mind, in contradistinction to the human or carnal mind. When our Master said, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," he declared that freedom was dependent on a knowledge of truth. Christian Science reveals the spiritual understanding of the Scriptures, which alone accounts for the healing recorded in the Old and New Testaments. A Christian Scientist is the best mental analyst; for it is just in proportion to his having the Mind of Christ that he can scientifically read the human mind, excise from it the offending errors, and replace them with the spiritual truth which heals and uplifts.

[A. J. Chapman in New Orleans (La.) Item]

A recent issue contains comments on "Brother Isaiah's" work by "R. W. S.," who states that the religion of Christian Scientists is based upon suggestion. Kindly permit me to correct this by saying that the religious teachings of Christian Science are based solely upon the spiritual interpretation of the Scriptures and upon the words and works of Jesus and his apostles. The healing in Christian Science is the destruction of the belief of sin and disease in human consciousness through a realization of God's omnipotence and of man as His image and likeness or the perfect spiritual idea. Christian Science healing is not the result of mental suggestion, nor is it brought about through any action of the so-called human mind.

[Stanley M. Sydenham in Sheffield (England) Telegraph]

In a recent issue, under the subheading of "No Substitute for Christianity" a clergyman is reported as saying, "Around us to-day are confused and uncertain voices—Christian Science, spiritualism, theosophy, and other substitutes for Christ and Christianity. These offer rest to weary souls, but fail to give it."

There is nothing confused or uncertain about the voice of Christian Science. It declares that it is possible to heal the sick, save the sinner, and comfort the sorrowing through prayer to-day, as in the time of Jesus; and grateful thousands acknowledge that it has done and is doing this, thus proving that it is not a substitute for Christianity, but the Christianity established by the great Master. In the words of Mrs. Eddy in the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 138), "Jesus established in the Christian era the precedent for all Christianity, theology, and healing. Christians are under as direct orders now, as they were then, to be Christlike, to possess the Christ-spirit, to follow the Christ-example, and to heal the sick as well as the sinning."

The One Evil

FOR centuries much of the world has lived in terror of a curse. Even to-day, amongst uneducated people, quite apart from the dwellers in darkest Africa, the belief in the evil eye, or some such other terror, is far more potent than any belief in the power of good. The evolution of the whole idea may be traced back into the twilight of civilization. Primitive man, fearful of the blackness of the night, found one of his earliest expressions of worship in the moon which came to lighten the material darkness. Gradually, in his struggling realization of Principle, the sun took the place of the moon. Nevertheless the god of darkness in the folk-lore of the world always struggles for supremacy with the god of light; and though in these folk stories it is the god of light who invariably conquers, yet in practice the worshiper was far more apt to placate the god of darkness, whom he pictured as perpetually lying in wait to destroy him, rather than the god of light, whose hand was always stretched out to assist him.

To teach the world to rely on good as more powerful than evil was the great effort which came into existence with monotheism, for so long as there were many gods, it was impossible to induce the worshiper not to believe in the power of these gods, whom he invested with all his own mortal passions, to hurt rather than to help. Even the monotheist, allegorically fell back on the tree of good and of evil, and though he acknowledged only one God, Jhvh, whom he invested with all power, nevertheless he personified evil under the name of serpent, or Beelzebub, or a dozen other aliases, and so revivified the ancient story of the struggle of Merodach with Tiamat in the struggle of Bel and the dragon, or else rehearsed the contest of Marsyas with Apollo, in the story of the effort of Satan to tempt the human race.

All through the Old Testament there is traced this struggle of sensuality against spirituality, as portrayed in the efforts of the schools of the prophets to maintain a pure monotheism, in the face of the materialistic efforts of the priests of Baal, or Dagon, or of a hundred other deities, to intrench their worship with all the sensual appeals which could be addressed to the human mind. The Old Testament is the record of the gradual dawning of a better sense of good throughout the world, and this sense of good is always manifest in a willingness to accept good as the one omnipotent power, and evil as the travesty of that power. Thus Moses attempted, with the help of the law, to subdue and control the animal passions of the Israelites; thus Elijah strove to show, albeit by the most material means, that there was no power outside the dominion of Jhvh, especially on that wonderful day when he mocked the priests of Baal through the long hours when the sun was burning down on Carmel, until, at the moment of the evening sacrifice, he caused the fire to light upon his own sacrifice, and so brought about the slaughter of the priests of the disgraced deity; and so Isaiah appealed from the material sacrifice of goats and rams to the sacrifice of men's own passions, in the struggle to turn from evil to good.

It was not, however, until the time of Christ Jesus that humanity was rescued from this belief in evil through a metaphysical understanding of Principle, which revealed to it the nothingness of everything claiming to exist apart from God. "The Jewish tribal Jehovah," Mrs. Eddy writes, on page 140 of Science and Health, "was a man-projected God, liable to wrath, repentance, and human changeableness. The Christian Science God is universal, eternal, divine Love, which changeth not and causeth no evil, disease, nor death." There, indeed, is the difference between the God of the Old Testament and the God of the New. But the God of the New Testament had to be metaphysically defined to human thought before the carnal mind could begin to yield, through scientific understanding, to the divine Mind, and the possibility of the destruction of evil, as a false belief, be demonstrated to the world. Now, just as a man is willing to give up his sickness but is commonly unwilling to give up the pleasures and sins which produce that sickness, so men are, comparatively speaking, willing to give up the belief in the power of personal evil, but unwilling to give up the belief in the power of personal good. Jesus, who struck fundamentally at the root of every human belief, demolished this concept of personal good in one famous sentence. It was upon the day when the young ruler addressed to him the famous question, "Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?" Jesus' answer to him, if he could have understood it, was conclusive in more ways than one. "Why," he was asked, "callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is, God." What, of course, Jesus was trying to explain to him was that goodness was a divine quality, and that all the goodness manifested in the world was a reflection of the divine Mind, which alone was good. It is thus that healing, though it may seem to come through a person, always comes from divine Principle. Consequently, in order to be a good healer all the individual has to do is to live closely in obedience to Principle. "The mortal mind through which Truth appears most vividly," Mrs. Eddy writes, on page 295 of Science and Health, "is that one which has lost much materiality—much error—in order to become a better transparency for Truth. Then, like a cloud melting into thin vapor, it no longer hides the sun."

The only good, then, is Principle, and this being so, it is equally clear that there is none evil but one, that is the devil or mortal mind. What seems to be evil in the human character is only a reflection of the evil in the mortal mind; and the best exponent of evil, consequently, is the person who has lived close enough to evil to be sufficiently material to obstruct the light of Principle. Such a person is impervious even to a recognition of the danger of believing a lie. "The healthy sinner," Mrs. Eddy says, on page 404 of Science and Health, "is the hardened sinner." It is clear, then, that the only sinner is mortal mind, and that just as the person who lives close to Principle reflects, in the measure of the purity of his life, the divine Mind, so the person who lives close to evil reflects, in the density of his materiality, mortal mind. Fortunately, however, mortal mind is itself a negation, is nothing but a counterfeit of the divine Mind, and thus the mortal sinner is nothing but the counterfeit of his own spiritual reality. And this is why it is so essential to the welfare of the human being that he should persistently reject the belief of the claim of evil, which has been handed down from father to son, out of the twilight of history, when the faint light of the moon lit symbolically the seas of evil, and accept the truer concept of divine Mind symbolized in the sun. No human being can safely regard his fellow man as a sinner. This does not mean that he has to pretend that the drunkard does not drink, the liar tell his lie, or the slanderer emit his slander. It does mean that he should recognize that all these mental conditions are conditions of a sick humanity, and that the drunkard, the liar, or the slanderer is nothing but the counterfeit, to the human senses, of the image and likeness of God. "Jesus," Mrs. Eddy writes, on pages 476 and 477 of Science and Health, "beheld in Science the perfect man, who appeared to him where sinning mortal man appears to mortals. In this perfect man the Saviour saw God's own likeness, and this correct view of man healed the sick."

FREDERICK DIXON.

Present Inspiration

FOR the doing of good one never has to wait for a time of special inspiration. When one looks wholly to Principle for all good, one finds that the infinity of goodness is omnipresent. In other words, each one is entitled to prove for himself that he has exactly the right goodness of God in all circumstances. His every utterance of the truth, his whole silent reasoning as to what the truth is, must, then, be of healing benefit without limit. The inspiration for the giving of a testimony in the Wednesday evening meetings or through the Christian Science periodicals, the ability to write a clearly arranged and rightly expressed article, all this comes not with waiting for a convenient human season but is even at the present moment the gift of God. It is unthinkable that God should give ability at one time and withhold it at another. The ability of the true man is sustained in perfect order by divine Principle. As Peter tells us, "Wherefore I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, though ye know them, and be established in the present truth."

One who is determined to live in accord with Principle can never wait for a better time in the future for such living. There never will be a better time than to-day for spiritual healing. Just so, there never will be a time more replete with inspiration than the eternity which God knows now. It is man's duty to give expression to God. Divine intelligence requires the real man to be, without ceasing for an instant, the thoroughly competent expression of intelligence. As idea, the true man is ever fully qualified to manifest Principle. Mrs. Eddy says on page 88 of Science and Health: "Eloquence re-echoes the strains of Truth and Love. It is due to inspiration rather than to erudition." Infinite Truth depends in no way on merely mortal learning but is expressed in daily living, in health, wholeness, and continuous joy. To utter what expresses the divine Mind is always a privilege and service, and such utterance unfolds forever without hindrance from any suppositional arguments of error.

This does not mean, of course, that emotional haste will ever accomplish anything. The omnipresence of divine inspiration is never to be confused with any sense of human impulsiveness. It requires thorough work, righteous effort, to demonstrate the fullness of true knowing. Exactness, patience, quiet continuance in action—in spite of any suggestions of the supposed mortal mind that would try to nullify goodness, these are among the qualities essential for the demonstration of intelligent service to Principle now and always. An ecstasy of so-called mortal temperament never has really produced anything; but the sureness that the divine Mind alone governs man means complete ability in all expression. Hence genuine inspiration is never humanly emotional but is always spiritually deliberate, though immediately and perpetually effective. It is always healing, for it is in itself what constitutes spiritual healthiness in true existence. The man of God's creating, living in the full vigor of the divine Life, is never at a loss as to what to say or do, but inevitably gives expression to Principle.

On pages 7 and 8 of "The People's Idea of God" Mrs. Eddy says: "Scientific discovery and the inspiration of Truth have taught me that the health and character of man become more or less perfect as his mind-models are more or less spiritual. Because God is Spirit, our thoughts must spiritualize to approach Him, and our methods grow more spiritual to accord with our thoughts. Religion and medicine must be dematerialized to present the right idea of Truth; then will this idea cast out error and heal the sick." Genuine spirituality is not brief or limited in any way; it is not manifest as merely brilliant flashes; it is never mingled in the least with materiality. Instead, it has infinite continuity and divine arrangement, exists entirely apart from any such mirage as matter, and does take the place of all false concepts.

Thus there should never be, to the student of Christian Science, any hesitancy on the subject of inspiration. Doubt, fear, and delay are but names for belief in the hypothetical mortal mind. The energy of omnipresent Spirit annihilates all this belief, by whatever name it may be called, and replaces it with the indefatigable idea. It is good that each one has to be active for himself in accord with the divine Mind in order to prove the eternal immediacy of the one inspiring force, which is always Principle. Each one has to demonstrate with gladness that he is ever ready to do what the divine Mind has to be done. As Mrs. Eddy declares on page 596 of Science and Health, "The illuminations of Science give us a sense of the nothingness of error, and they show the spiritual inspiration of Love and Truth to be the only fit preparation for admission to the presence and power of the Most High." The whole study and practice of Christian Science must necessarily be calmly but forcefully inspiring. Day by day the many are proving this, and, in the ways that Mrs. Eddy provided, stating their proofs gladly for the benefit of all the world. The finding of inspiration as Mind manifest, never as any form of materiality, is the finding of omnipresent infinity, because Mind is always here to use. The very understanding of this suffices to heal all manner of supposed diseases and to replace any sense of lack with abundance. That is why it is such a thorough joy to be a faithful student of Christian Science.

Among the Churches

Current Notes

MEADVILLE, PA.—The annual lecture this year was given by First Church of Christ, Scientist. We have been trying to work this problem out according to Principle, and when we found the way had opened for Second Church to dissolve and become First Church of Christ, Scientist, under the charter we indeed rejoiced. So now there is but one Church of Christ, Scientist, in Meadville. This field is showing a very steady and decided growth and we know it will continue.

The Lectures

In accordance with the preference of the Board of Lectureship, the names of lecturers will not appear hereafter in connection with reports of lecture introductions as printed in the Christian Science Sentinel.—Editorial Department.

Flushing, N. Y. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by August Plischke, who said in part:—

In Matthew it is recorded that when Jesus sent forth his twelve disciples, he commanded them to "preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand. Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils." In following the command of their Master in this age, Christian Scientists are again putting on the undivided garment of the Christ, bringing knowledge and salvation—science and health—to all mankind. It will have been noticed in the public press of late that many of the churches throughout the land are expressing the thought that deliverance from the present unrest and suffering should largely emanate from the church.

The magnificent task of this agency for good has been clearly set forth by Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, when in the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," she gave the scientific definition of church. She states on page 583: "The Church is that institution, which affords proof of its utility and is found elevating the race, rousing the dormant understanding from material beliefs to the apprehension of spiritual ideas and the demonstration of divine Science, thereby casting out devils, or error, and healing the sick."

Manhattan, Kan. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by John H. Parker, who said in part:—

There surely is abundant reason for all people to be interested in any religious or other teaching which promises even a small measure of relief from the increasing number of forms of sin and sickness which seem to surround us. For almost fifty years Christian Scientists have been studying and demonstrating the truth of the Science of being as taught by Christ Jesus more than nineteen centuries ago. Their faithful work has borne fruit in nearly every corner of the globe, and thousands of men and women have been healed of sin and disease through the understanding of God and His law, which they have gained through the study of Christian Science. Christian Scientists are quite willing to be judged by the standard set forth by Jesus when he said, "By their fruits ye shall know them."

Charleston, S. C. (Society).—Lecturer introduced by Miss Mary G. Radcliffe, who said in part:—

Our lecturer brings to us the answer to that great question asked centuries ago by Pilate, "What is truth?" and which has been ringing down the ages still unanswered, until the light of Christian Science gave an understanding of what God and man is. Those of us here, who bring receptive thought, will bear away the answer to that question, "What is truth?"

Springfield, Ill. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Frank T. Sheets, who said in part:—

The leading interest of humanity is the quest for happiness. It is becoming more and more apparent that this unending search has led far too many misguided pilgrims to embrace the elusive phantoms of material pleasure, pride of power, hoarding of money, and overreaching the other fellow. That these things have not brought true happiness is proved by the social unrest, class hatred, and industrial turmoil which mar our civic life to-day. A truly happy man cannot hate his fellow beings, envy another his possessions, nor wrongfully oppress his neighbor. The indulgence in such motives may seem to bring satisfaction, but it immediately destroys happiness. To tired, sinning, suffering humanity in every station, Christian Science offers the key to happiness. It brings into immediate practical use man's sonship with God, and endows each one with God's ever present love, unlimited resources, joyous health, and true success.

Bristol, England (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by R. J. Chandler, who said in part:—

Christian Science is engaging the attention of the whole world. The belief of mortal man that he has a mind of his own with which he can think and act independently of God, is the cause of all the conflicting forces which make up the sum total of evil,—sin, pestilence, war, poverty, and death; but Christian Science, basing its authority on the Bible, has come to this age to free mankind from this belief by showing that in reality there is only one infinite Mind which controls the whole universe harmoniously, the very basis of its activity being divine Love; and it is only for mortal man to allow this Mind to control him—in the words of Paul, "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus"—in order to grasp something of that truth which Jesus said would make men free.

Salem, Ore. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Mrs. Judge Burnett, who said in part:—

The Christian Science movement, through its church services, reading rooms, lectures, practitioners, teachers, and literature, enables us to understand the truth about God and man's relation to God. This truth, properly understood, will enable one to heal the sick and to destroy sin. The desire of the world is for a religion of love. The students who have given time and thought to the study of Christian Science, find such a religion, as well as the peace that passeth understanding. We read in Isaiah, "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee: because he trusteth in thee." As we practice and live Christian Science, we realize that God's law is ever operative and that good is continually flowing from God to man.

Fall River, Mass. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Mrs. Florence A. Lewis, who said in part:—

There are those opposed to Christian Science from a lack of understanding of its real meaning. There can be no opponents of this Science when its real meaning is thoroughly understood, because it is the law of righteousness, made practical and operative in the affairs of men, healing sin and disease, and destroying inharmony. We believe that we have found in Christian Science a panacea for all the ills that flesh is heir to.

Weehawken, N. J. (Society).—Lecturer introduced by Alfred H. Koeller, who said in part:—

When Jesus the Christ came on earth, as the Son of God, as His messenger, to reveal God in His true light as an ever present, loving Father, he proved by his works what he taught, and applied them to every human condition or need. Christian Scientists accept the teachings of Jesus the Christ as true and practical, and are applying these teachings, based on the right understanding of what God is, to their every human problem; and this right understanding of God is bringing heaven or peace on earth here and now, instead of in a far and distant future. This is not a new doctrine, but just the truth that Jesus taught, and is applicable through the understanding which Christian Science unfolds.

COCOANUT GROVE, FLA. (Society).—Lecturer introduced by William V. Little, who said in part:—

Christian Science is not a new conception of that infinite power, by whatever name called, that controls the universe. Surely David of Bethlehem was a Christian Scientist, as well as a great poet, when he wrote those words we all know and love, beginning, "The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want." We all believe those words to be true; we all believe in the Bible, in a vague sort of way; but how few of us are able to use our knowledge of religion to meet our everyday needs. This is what those who believe in Christian Science and practice its teachings, are doing in a most wonderful way.

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, CALIF. (Society, The Leland Stanford Junior University).—Lecturer introduced by Miss Gwendolen H. Garsed, who said in part:—

The chief business in life for the members of a university is seeking and giving out information concerning the problems over which the human mind has worked and puzzled, often for centuries. In the performance of our daily tasks we many times encounter experiences which are trying and perplexing, and often we find that this store of human knowledge, which we have been so laboriously collecting, is powerless to aid us in solving these problems. It is then that we long for something to which we may turn with confidence and the assurance of a satisfactory answer. There are many of us here this evening who have been privileged to find through the study of Christian Science that love which "never faileth."

PITTSBURGH, KAN. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by A. L. Wiles, who said in part:—

Throughout all ages the mind of man has reached out grasping for a conception of a power higher than his own, a power adequate to supply guidance and protection amid forces that he felt and experienced but could not understand. Always man has felt the existence of the infinite, and has sought to clothe it in vestments of his own puny and limited beliefs. Slowly through the ages this conception took form, until finally the Master, Jesus the Christ, brought to the world the idea of God as Spirit, as infinite Mind, Life, Truth, Love. The Master brought not alone a new idea of God but as well a higher conception of man. He taught that God is good and infinitely perfect, and he revealed man as the idea, the reflection, or the image and likeness of God. He taught one creator, God, and he revealed the fact that man, created by God, who is All-power, did not and cannot change, but must forever remain perfect as the Mind that forms him. The manifested result of the teachings of Jesus the Christ was the healing of all manner of diseases and the destruction of sin. And in the Scripture we read the Master's words: "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also." Thus he assured all mankind for all time that a correct understanding of his teachings will enable them to heal the sick and to find a correct solution for their every problem. The practical import of our Master's teachings is unfolded to us in our own age through the teachings of Christian Science.

ROCHESTER, N. Y. (Second Church).—Lecturer introduced by William I. Coger, who said in part:—

To-day when the whole world is undergoing social, political, and religious revolution, Christian Science is offering to mankind the true elements of democracy, and thousands are experiencing the liberating effect of the Christly enlightenment that it is bringing into their lives. And in these soul redeemed lives there is the constantly increasing recognition of the fundamentals of that which is destined to establish eventually the universal brotherhood of man. Instead of presenting a vague, illogical doctrine for blind acceptance, Christian Science comes with demonstration, even the applied understanding of the one true God and of man's inseparable relationship to Him.

EVANSTON, ILL. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Miss Nina Winans, who said in part:—

If one were to choose a single word characteristic of the interesting transitional period in which we are living, uncertainty, it seems to me, would best describe the dominant note of the human consciousness to-day. All the world realizes more or less clearly that the old order has gone forever. Each one from his specific experience designates a different cause for the present chaotic state of affairs and prescribes means of improvement. All hope that the new order will be a better one, although appearances are most discouraging. What will really be accomplished is conjectural.

Contrary to this flux of human opinion Christian Science goes directly to the root of the problem and not only uncovers the fundamental error which causes uncertainty and failure, but also states a scientific rule of Principle which, if intelligently and persistently applied, will not only improve but heal all wrong conditions, assuring to humanity righteous guidance and divine protection and supply.

DAYTONA, FLA. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by W. E. Hitchcock, who said in part:—

Christian Science has come to this age as "the higher hope on earth," unfolding to human consciousness God as infinite good, as unchanging Love, and teaching mankind how to utilize this understanding of the ever presence and omnipotent power of good in the healing of sorrow, sin, and every kind of disease—mental, moral, and physical.—Daytona Journal.

WELLAND, ONTARIO, CANADA (Society).—Lecturer introduced by E. Clemens, who said in part:—

In recent years the world has witnessed much of "man's inhumanity to man," and mankind is demanding to-day as never before something they can apply to their individual life problems. Christian Science fills that need, because it teaches constructive and demonstrable Christianity.

FLORENCE, ITALY (Society).—Lecturer introduced by Commendatore Professor Paladini, who said in part (translation):—

It may seem strange to you that I, who do not belong to the Christian Science Church, but of which, however, I am a fervent sympathizer, should present the lecturer, who comes here to speak to you of Christian Science. I will explain. The beneficent ladies, to whom I have often gone for works of good, have asked me to do this, and I have accepted gladly, not only to give them pleasure, but also because I have a deep and sincere esteem for the lecturer who will speak. To these personal reasons I must add one of a general order. As an Italian and as a Tuscan I feel great gratitude for the conspicuous works of good done by the philanthropic Christian Scientists in Italy and especially here in Florence. The eloquence of this work both during and since the war has been given to the public through our press, but this is the first time I have had an opportunity of speaking of it before an Italian, American, and English audience. I know that in doing this I go against the orders of the great and exemplary modesty in which their work is done all over the world, but this must show our gratitude to this great organization.

Testimonies of Healing

I have every reason to be grateful for Christian Science. About six years ago my daughter sent me a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, and I soon learned that it was a most wonderful book. It was an inspiration to me and gave me a great spiritual uplift. Shortly after I commenced reading it a very stubborn cough of a chronic nature was overcome, and later, through the help of a practitioner, I was healed of gallstones, influenza, and many other disturbing physical conditions. I have also met and overcome a very discordant home condition, for which I am most grateful. I am grateful to the loving practitioners who helped me through those dark hours of seeming sickness and error and into the truth, which has given me peace and is enabling me daily to reflect greater activity and usefulness. I am grateful to Mrs. Eddy for the understanding of the Bible which I have gained through studying her Key to the Scriptures.

(Mrs.) Hannah Cherryman, Detroit, Mich.

It is with an earnest desire to help some one who may be struggling with sickness or sorrow, as well as from a deep sense of gratitude for good received, that I send this testimony. I first began reading the Christian Science Sentinel some twelve years ago. It was given me by a neighbor who was fully aware of our great need. I was always eager for the new copy, reading the articles with much interest, but above all for the pages given to testimonies, as I was searching for something that would fit our case, as I then thought.

Previous to reading the Sentinel I was prone to think of Christian Science more in a humorous strain than any other. Realizing fully there was authority in the Bible for the healing work accomplished through Christian Science, still I felt it almost blasphemy to try to do the works of Christ Jesus. My thought soon changed, however. I got possession of an old copy of Science and Health and tried to read it, but, as I could not understand it, returned it and continued reading the Sentinel for two years. During this time the desire came to us to go west for change of climate. We did so; still no relief came, but it was then I began the earnest study of Christian Science, not for myself but for a loved one. The waters in the next few years seemed dark and deep, but I can truly say that Christ hath stilled the tempest; the "Peace, be still" has been spoken, and I am at peace. This peace of mind, this surcease of mental agony, the healing of grief, is the one thing for which I can never be too grateful. During this trying time a friend, who is a Christian Scientist, helped me step by step until I could walk alone.

Personally, and in our home we have had many beautiful demonstrations over the ills of the flesh. The error which caused me most suffering was headache. Sleeping or waking I seemed conscious of a pain in my head, often accompanied by great distress of the stomach. This error was slow in yielding but has been overcome, and if it tries to talk is quickly silenced. I have not used any material means for about ten years and, while I am most grateful for all benefits received, words cannot express my gratitude for the rule of Principle, as given to us in Science and Health by Mrs. Eddy, by which to work out our problems as they present themselves—something tangible, something we can apply every moment of the day. Unbiased study of Christian Science inevitably enables one to see that it is the pure, unadulterated teaching of Jesus the Christ.

I am truly grateful for all our periodicals, for the daily study made possible for us, for the privilege of membership in The Mother Church as well as in a branch church, even though I seem to be deprived of the privilege of attending regularly. Endeavoring to live according to the definition of "Church" as given in Science and Health is the greater aim.

Truly grateful am I to our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for her purity of thought, which enabled her to receive this revelation, and for her courage to stand alone with God and give it to suffering humanity. May I show my gratitude by my living.—(Mrs.) Libbie W. Fincks, Wilson Creek, Wash.

This is an expression of gratitude for the many blessings that have come to me and mine through Christian Science. Although I had heard of Christian Science all my life, I continued to be one of those who having eyes see not, and having ears hear not; but the voice of Truth though still and small is very insistent, and I was finally brought to the realization that this wonderful Science, of which I had heard so much, was applicable to my own case, which was a complication of fear, worry, and poverty.

The occasion for my calling a practitioner was an attack of influenza. I had all the symptoms of that supposedly dread disease, including extreme nervous exhaustion and heart failure, and was on the verge of passing on. I was confined to my bed, surrounded by medicine bottles, pills, and poultices,—all the paraphernalia of materia medica. The doctor had been attending me for two weeks and doing his utmost to help me, but failed. Then the practitioner came, so quietly and so calmly, and silently treated me! At once all pain and worry left me, and in a few days I was going about perfectly well and with a song of gratitude on my lips. All material means of healing disappeared at once from our home, and have never been resorted to since.

I have continued to study "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" and other Christian Science literature, and have thus been helped and guided in all of my daily problems, and have been able to ward off threatened illness by adhering to Mrs. Eddy's advice, "Meet every adverse circumstance as its master" (Science and Health, p. 419). Christian Science is indeed the mother's helper, and I am especially grateful for the very great help its teaching brings to the solution of the numerous and perplexing problems which arise daily in every household. It would make me very happy to know that every mother had a copy of Science and Health at hand to help her over the difficult places.

I am indeed very grateful to our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for her inspired and patient work in guiding us into the straight and narrow way pointed out by our Master. I am grateful for the privilege of attending the services. I love all of the Christian Science literature and am especially helped and uplifted by the beautiful hymns.

It is many years since Christian Science came to me, and it would be a long story to tell of all the benefits I have received from it. I was healed of a bronchial affection which was treated by some of the best physicians both north and south, and one of them told me I could never live north again as the winters would be too severe for me. After I had spent two winters, at different times, in the south and had taken every remedy I could hear of that might help me, Christian Science was brought to my notice. Since then it has been my only physician. My healing was accomplished slowly and there were many night vigils, as well as day, in which "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy was my only companion. Its teachings always met my need, and my complete healing came without my making any permanent change of residence. I learned that climate had no effect on me, as I have since lived in climates supposed to be hard on those with any affection of the throat, without any inconvenience to myself.

In the years that have passed since I first knew of Christian Science, I have seen many curable and so-called incurable diseases healed and can truly affirm that Christian Science does heal the sick. Words can never express the gratitude I feel to God and our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for the wonderful work she has done for all mankind. My daily prayer is for more wisdom and love and a fuller understanding of infinite Mind.

Nineteen years ago Christian Science came to me in an hour of great need, when I had met with an accident to my knee, which confined me to my room for three months. I was in bed the greater part of the time under the care of a surgeon who called almost daily, and I was steadily becoming worse. Seven physicians gave me no hope of being cured; on the contrary, some thought I would always be obliged to use crutches and that a stiff joint would inevitably follow. I was in despair. After talking with a Christian Science practitioner, I decided to take treatment, and awoke the following morning healed. It has been my great privilege to prove this truth for others and there is no joy like it in all the world. My gratitude goes out daily for the blessings received through study of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy.—(Mrs.) ELLA G. NAST, Larchmont, N. Y.

Christian Science found me at a time of darkness, sorrow, and despair. I turned to it as a last resource, and a brighter day came through the faithful help of a practitioner, proving that God is a very present help in trouble. For ten years I had been under the constant care of physicians for gastric ulceration of the stomach, and they did all they could for me. A severe operation was undergone, and after a long period I was still in a state of semi-invalidism, never free from pain, never without medicines, and subsisting mostly on milk and milk foods. Now I enjoy all kinds of food, and am free from pain, and for this healing I am truly thankful to God and grateful to Mrs. Eddy, and to all who have helped me out of darkness into light.—(Mrs.) LOUISE COMMONS, Gateshead, Durham, England.

I wish to express my gratitude for Christian Science. About seven years ago I was healed of a belief of abdominal tumor, being told by one of the most prominent surgeons of this city that I should undergo an operation at once. He also stated that certain symptoms, one of which was fainting, were overwhelming evidence that an operation was imperative. At that time I knew nothing of Christian Science, but "man's extremity is God's opportunity," and I was led to ask for a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," from a lady I knew who had been a student for many years. About two weeks after taking up the study I again felt one of these fainting spells coming on. I was in a public place and my first thought was that I must not faint or I would be taken at once to the hospital. I clung to a table with both hands, and the twenty-third psalm came to me, "The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want." In a short time I was able to go to a street car and thence to my home. I was healed of this claim by reading our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." I never knew when the healing took place but gradually began to grow stronger. This is but one of the many healings in the home, and I am learning more of this truth every day.

(Mrs.) EDITH GIBSON, Denver, Colo.

I have had so much help and encouragement from reading the testimonies in the Sentinel, that I think it is time for me to give thanks for the many blessings I have received. Since taking up the study of Christian Science, some eight years ago, I have learned to love the Bible. As I study it each day in connection with Science and Health, the meaning of the Scriptures becomes clear to me, whereas before I did not understand or believe them and so discontinued reading the Bible entirely; now it is my daily food. I have had many healings, some of them instantaneous. Pleurisy, acute indigestion, nervousness, bad colds, and many other ills have been met through the faithful work of a practitioner. I am most grateful for membership in The Mother Church, also for the Sentinel, Journal, and all other Christian Science literature. I am grateful to God and to our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for giving to the world this healing truth.

(Mrs.) EMMA BROWNING, Indianapolis, Ind.

Deep gratitude actuates me to testify to the many blessings which we have received through Christian Science. About seven years ago we first learned of Christian Science through a lady residing here, also through a gentleman from America, who made his temporary abode here; but at that time we had too little understanding and too much doubt of the healings to realize the great value of this Science. Having gained, through education, a faithfulness to duty, I was impelled to study the Bible and Mrs. Eddy's textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," conscientiously. Through study much doubt was dispelled, and I realized that this teaching had a firm foundation. Above all I had great fear to overcome, which I conquered through the knowledge that God is omnipresent.

Of the many proofs of the healing work of the truth I wish to relate a few. Our son was healed of a tenacious, nervous stomach trouble, which he had had since birth. The healing was comparatively slow but came in the measure that our understanding increased; and our gratitude was all the greater when the boy was able to take and digest all nourishment. He attends a private school away from home, but we would not have been able to send him away from home had we not gained the understanding through Christian Science that no matter where he may be he is in God's protecting care, for as a result of the many sicknesses through which he had passed in his infancy he had become very nervous.

At this time I was constantly learning to understand more of this Science; also how to apply it to all our problems in daily life. Through this we have received many blessings in business matters, for our business prospered in spite of the severe warring years. In regard to our maintenance we have had many proofs of God's unfailing love, for we are constantly endeavoring to realize, and are proving, the inexhaustible source of supply; otherwise, due to the food ration system, we would probably often have suffered want.

In February, 1916, my husband was trained as a recruit, and I am happy that during his military service, which probably was not so easy at his age, I was able to help him somewhat through mental work. In the fall of 1918 he was healed, through the help of a practitioner, of a severe case of grippe. At the beginning of 1919 I burned my left foot by spilling boiling water over it. The fright was great and I was hardly able to think, owing to the pain. I then commenced to work in Christian Science, and slept several hours. I was evidently not alert enough, however, for through some thought of fear the foot became inflamed and very much swollen after eight days. I was helped by a practitioner, but had many well-intentioned but very harmful thoughts to contend with in my surroundings. It resulted in periostitis and I often suffered excruciating pain. Even the thought that the foot would have to be amputated entered my mind, but eventually the truth was victor over error. Improvement was steady until the foot was completely healed. Never since that time have I noticed anything in this regard, and am able to walk as though nothing had happened.

For all these wonderful proofs of God's omnipotence, omnipresence, and love we cannot express adequate gratitude. He is our help in all needs. How beautiful it is to know that we are His children, and He, as our dear Father, is ever present. I herewith also express our gratitude to Mrs. Eddy for the discovery and clear presentation of this truth; for her courage and perseverance. Next to God the honor is due her. I endeavor daily to follow in her footsteps so that all which has yet to be worked out will be solved, just as all other problems have been.

For ten years Christian Science has been of such help in my life that I would not for an instant be without it. This beautiful Science has taught me the footsteps of Truth, the availability of divine laws as well as the omnipotence of God, the divine Mind, in the solution of every problem. I have lately had a greater proof of this than ever before, when my spiritual individuality in God was demonstrated, the power of matter proved to be a lie, and I realized that "Spirit is the only substance, the invisible and indivisible, infinite God" (Science and Health, p. 335). On Saturday, November 29, 1919, I was on my way home at 11.30, when I suddenly remembered that I had no apples for my lunch. As the hucksters were on the other side of the street I started across, thinking I could do it safely. But I was thrown down by an automobile truck which ran over my body, my thick coat being caught under the machine. I was dragged along for about thirty feet on the slippery pavement before the truck came to a stop, leaving torn pieces of clothing all along the way. The crowd shouted furiously at the driver and said, "The poor man is crushed to pieces." But when the policemen, with the aid of the driver, got me out, covered with mud and blood but alive, the crowd shouted, "A miracle!" and their excitement increased when they saw me, held up by the policemen, walk to the nearest drug store for first aid, and draw up a statement of the accident.

What surprised these people most was to see me alive and they did not understand how I had escaped from being completely crushed, or decapitated by the chain. They did not know that when I found myself caught under the body of the machine, seeming to struggle with the brute force of matter, I had not lost consciousness of the truth. The ninety-first psalm came to my thought and I dwelt in the "secret place of the most High," putting on the "shield and buckler" of Truth. I was filled with joy and could appreciate the saying that "man's extremity is God's opportunity," since I had experienced the obstruction of death by the understanding of Life, God, and I exclaimed aloud, "Praise be to God!" In this state of mind I refused the help of the druggists, but as I was to be taken to the hospital I let them clean and dress the wounds. In the meantime the policemen were making their report. The driver having notified a Christian Scientist whose address I had given him, offered to take me to the hospital and I was put on the car with a policeman on each side of me. It was then that the driver appealed for my pity saying: "I have heard that you are an officer and you will understand my position when I tell you that I have been through the war and have been demobilized just five months. I am married, and have a child and a sick relative to provide for. This is my first accident. I am on probation with this firm and if you do not help me they will take away my license and my family and I will be destitute." I told him that I would relieve him of all responsibility for the accident, but that I hoped it would be a lesson to him, and I gave him a written statement so that he should not be disturbed. How could I refuse? All this time my heart was just filled with joy.

At the hospital I declined to have the wounds dressed. As soon as I got into bed, a morbid condition of the system developed, due to wounds, which lasted until next morning. I spent the night in declaring the truth, declaring that there was no sensation in matter, and within a few hours I was able to overcome the pain and fever. The next day a friend sent a practitioner to see me and she brought me comfort; we both worked for my recovery, which was rapid, and four days later I was able to leave the hospital with the approval of the chief surgeon, who said that he had never seen such a healing. To get home I had to rely on God's goodness for strength, for I had to walk. The taxi which I had ordered was requisitioned by the police for an urgent need. After walking for an hour and a half I was able to go up five flights, leaning on the arm of my janitor. I have never felt such joy and happiness as I experienced during this severe trial through which I gained the knowledge of the impotence of matter and felt the assurance of life in God, our heavenly Father. I take this opportunity to express my deep gratitude to our dear Leader, who discovered and founded Christian Science for the welfare of mankind.

Captain Génisset, Paris, France.

Christian Science is in truth our warmth in winter and our shade in summer. This was proved to me twelve years ago when I was healed of a severe attack of nervous prostration, through the loving ministrations of Christian Science. I had been ill for many years, and had sought healing in several sanatoriums. For months I had not known what it was to sleep. Double doses of sleeping medicines seemed to have no effect. I became melancholy over the thought that I could not conduct my household, or cope with the educational problems which confronted me.

In my darkest hour the message of Christian Science was brought to me. I immediately dismissed my doctors and nurses and went to a Christian Science practitioner. I told him my tale of woe, which seemed very real to me at the time. He introduced me to a God who is Love, a loving heavenly Father, who had not sent this affliction upon me, and assured me that because God had not sent it I did not have to keep it another moment. It seemed to me that I was receiving for the first time something for which I had been hungering and thirsting all my life. The practitioner then handed me the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker

Eddy, and told me to read it while he was treating me. I had never seen the little book before, and knew nothing of Christian Science treatment. I did not know what prayer in Christian Science was, nor what the gentleman was doing who sat opposite me with closed eyes; but I did know one thing—a wonderful peace had come over me, which has never left me during all these years. When I went into that office I was very anxious to die and when I left I wanted to go home to live and be a real wife and mother. That night I slept like a baby, and the next day was able to resume my duties—a new woman.

I read the little book for three days and late into the nights, and proved the truth of the Bible injunction, "Acquaint now thyself with him, and be at peace." As I sat reading, my husband said to me, "Do you know what you are reading?" I answered, "No; but I do know that I no longer want to jump out of that window, and I want to know what did it." I soon learned that it was the Christ, Truth, that had healed me, and when I found that God's law of healing was contained in the Bible and explained in the Christian Science textbook, I made up my mind to study these books faithfully so that I might be able to do for others what had been done for me. Instead of problems, household and educational duties are now considered opportunities to prove the allness of God, good. Christian Science is teaching me how to be a better wife, mother, housekeeper, home maker, neighbor, and friend.

I am deeply grateful to our Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, who was pure enough and spiritually minded enough to reveal the Christ, Truth, to this age—the truth which brings to mankind "the peace of God, which passeth all understanding."—(Mrs.) STELLA EISEMAN, Far Rockaway, N. Y.

I wish to express my deep gratitude for the many blessings that have come to me through the study and application of Christian Science. For many years I suffered constantly from headaches, and had formed the habit of taking drugs to such an extent that I thought I could not get along without them. I was also in the habit of taking physic nearly every day, and was in a most wretched condition. For over four years now I have not touched a drop of medicine, and for this words fail me to express my gratitude. But I think I am more deeply grateful for the moral uplift and for the spiritual regeneration that have come to me through the study of the Bible, Science and Health, and the Christian Science periodicals.

This testimony is given as an expression of thanks for the protection which a knowledge of the truth as taught in Christian Science afforded me in a business transaction.

In the latter part of 1918 an advertisement appeared in our local paper offering to exchange property in a southern state for a city house and lot. We had talked of selling our city property and moving to some place in the middle south. We answered the advertisement and a man called to tell us about the property. He disclaimed any financial interest in it but had lived where it was located, and gave us the name and address of the owner. We corresponded with the owner and arrived at a basis for a trade if his property proved to be satisfactory to us. About this time we decided to go south and arranged our trip to pass through the place where the property was located. To our great surprise we met some of our home people at the station as we alighted from the train and discovered that some of the land in question joined theirs, the rest of it being about four miles out, which they were well acquainted with. From them we learned that the property had been quoted to us as being worth more than three times what it had been offered for to local parties, with no buyers. As we continued our journey we realized that we had been protected from being victimized; that the truth which we had expressed in the value set upon our own property, and the intent to deal fairly, had necessarily revealed error, and by uncovering it made it of no effect.

In conclusion I wish to explain that we did not know that we had any friends living at that place. They did not know we were coming there, but they were at the station to receive us and insisted that we go to their home. Thus we were provided for in every way. It is with a deep sense of gratitude that we acknowledge our debt to divine Love and to our revered Leader, who gave us the truth for our guidance.—GEORGE L. LAWRENCE, Jamestown, N. Y.

As one who has received unnumbered benefits from Christian Science, I feel it both my pleasure and my duty to testify to a few of them, though there would not be room enough in the whole of the Sentinel to contain them all. This beautiful religion has changed my whole nature and my whole outlook on life; it has made me find love, sympathy, and desirable characteristics in my fellow man where before I had only seen selfishness, jealousy, and censure; and it has changed me from a sickly and discontented woman to one brimming over with love, joy, activity, and health. Whereas I used to suffer from pangs of rheumatism the very moment I got my shoes even slightly damp, now if need be I can sit for hours in soaking boots without the slightest suggestion of ill effects. Headaches, which used to occur every few days, are now things of the past. I sprained my ankle one afternoon, the bones twisting over until they touched the ground, but that same evening I joined in a skipping match without any discomfort.

While playing tennis one afternoon I was struck on the eyeball with tremendous force by a tennis ball, at only a couple of yards' distance; the pain left me like a flash, while the consequent swelling and discoloration, which were extremely pronounced, disappeared within the hour without leaving any subsequent trace, and I was able to continue playing tennis as if nothing had happened. A little finger which was crooked and also stiff to rigidity, owing to an accident about thirty years before, was completely healed in one night. But the visible and physical results of Christian Science are nothing to the invisible and spiritual ones, although we greatly value the former, if only for a practical proof of the truth of our religion—this Jacob's ladder that will finally lead us to the very throne of grace.—(Mrs.) NELLIE ELIZABETH SHERWOOD-KELLY, London, England.

It is about six years since I first took up the study of Christian Science. In that time I have had many healings. One I wish to speak of is the healing of fatigue. Before taking up this study it seems to me I can never remember a time when I was not tired. Even as a child I did not enjoy the things other children did on account of this belief, but this has been entirely overcome, and now I can say I do not know what weariness means. No matter how long or strenuous the day, I am quite equal to it; for this I am very grateful. But I am most grateful for the healing of grief in the passing on of a loved one; this to me was wonderful. For these and many other healings I am grateful.

Signs of the Times

[Dr. Maldwyn Hughes as reported in Streatham News, London, England]

Thirty years ago Dr. Dale said the next revival would be an ethical revival. It has come without observation. It is shown in the new attitude to social questions. Things are done to-day without discussion that would have provoked bitter controversy fifteen or twenty years ago. Men are recognizing that Christianity does stand in some relation, not only to the life of the individual, but to all spheres of collective life.

It is recognized that war violates the highest principles of morality, that there is something wrong in the present industrial strife and competition, and men want to fashion society more in conformity with the idea of brotherhood.

A reference to the present chaotic state of Europe brought the speaker to the question of reconstruction, which he insisted meant revolution. The gospel of Jesus Christ was revolutionary, and the most revolutionary literature was to be found, not in the Bolshevist press, but in the four gospels. Jesus Christ was a constructive revolutionist, whereas most revolutionists led only to chaos. Their business was to translate the meaning of the kingdom of God into terms of social and industrial order, and learn how to apply "Love thy neighbour as thyself" in business life.

[Bishop Francis J. McConnell, D. D., in The Constructive Quarterly]

There is no quarrel between the churches to-day. But each church is like a musician in possession of a distinctive instrument. The instrument may be excellent, and the musician may be playing it well, but the effect is not orchestral. Church union does not mean that one church is to give way to another for the sake of its own annihilation or obliteration, any more than an orchestral symphony means that the flute is to give way to the violin, or that both are to yield to the cornet. A flute does not cease to be a flute when it is played in an orchestra. There may be moments in the movement of the musical rendition when the flute is the only instrument heard, just as there will certainly be other moments when the tones of flute and cornet and all other instruments will blend in one unified whole. It is only in such wholeness that the Christianity of the church will attain unto the arresting and compelling forcefulness of final religious authority. . . . The good, the true, and the beautiful in the kingdom of God will stand fast before the judgment of all mankind when they are anew incarnated in one body of Christ, which will do for all the world what the incarnation of the Son of God did for the dwellers in Galilee and Jerusalem in the olden days.

[Rev. Azariah F. Reimer in Zion's Herald]

Just one remedy will cure every ill in our distracted world to-day, and that is Christianity. Its practice must be by every individual in all the relations of life—in statecraft, in business, in social relations, in the home, in the secret life and thought. For this transformation we need a new brand of discipleship—the discipleship of the single eye.

[Charles R. Brown, D. D., LL. D., in The Biblical World]

The desire for the applause of men is a sorry source of motive. The boy who will not do his duty unless he is being praised and petted for it is a poor specimen; he is in a fair way to become a self-conscious, conceited little snob. The man who will not perform unless he is in the limelight is all lath and plaster where there should be quartered oak—you cannot depend on him. The young woman who will not purr unless her fur is being constantly stroked the right way with compliments and bouquets and five-pound boxes, holds out no sure promise of ever being a companion and a helpmeet. All these people are only willing to do their prettiest "to be seen of men." The Master, who had a keen eye for shoddy and counterfeit, put them all into the discard.

Letters of Appreciation

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. Extracts from such letters follow:

JUST simply wish to express the great admiration and appreciation I have for the publications that have come through my hands during the last fourteen months. The benefits I have derived from the same are of such scope that I unhesitatingly could say that I received my English education from THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR. The front page, the Home Forum page, and the editorials have been my teachers, and I could fully rely upon them for truthfulness, exact and beautiful English, and wide range of knowledge. Not yet six years in this country, there are few that recognize in me a foreign born. I also wish to thank you for the splendid contents of the CHRISTIAN SCIENCE SENTINEL, which has been a moral and spiritual guide to me during the last fourteen months.

I SHALL not be able to subscribe after May 15 for some considerable time as I shall be constantly traveling till June, 1921. I just will have to rely on getting the MONITOR in each town I go to. It will be a real loss when I miss getting it, for reading it makes a perfect close to any day. I have greatly, miraculously benefited from Christian Science since last July—so little deserved—and only this morning on rereading the Christian Science article at breakfast I was instantly healed from an attack of bronchial laryngitis (for I have not coughed since) which had caused me the greatest discomfort and anxiety all night. Excuse me for saying all this, but I would like you to know that besides being the finest newspaper I know of, it has greatly helped me.

"What I say unto you I say unto all, WATCH." Jesus

VOLUME XXII JULY 24, 1920 NUMBER 47

Outshining Error

GRACE M. BOSWORTH

RECENTLY while pondering the teachings of Christian Science as to the unreality of evil, various seemingly contradictory passages from the Bible on this subject came into memory, and the effort to realize their unity of meaning was so helpful that I should like to pass on to others what I gleaned from them. Jesus' word in Matthew 5:39, "Resist not evil," is confronted by James 4:7, "Resist the devil, and he will flee from you," and another to keep it company in Romans 12:21, "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." In I Peter 5:8 the apostle characterizes the "devil" as the "adversary" or (Greek) "the opponent, or opposing argument." These seeming disagreements in the text are harmonized when we understand the meaning of the terms.

The word used by Jesus which is translated "evil" concerns physical beliefs and means effects, or results of sin; externalized imaginations presenting themselves under various guises for recognition by human consciousness as realities. Paul's word "evil" deals with the moral plane and means sin; in this plea for a practical self-surrender to the transforming power of divine Love, after detailing the method by which the many acts of human association can become open gateways for God, he sums it up with the counsel quoted above, which in the light of its context would seem to mean: Let the supremacy of Love assert itself as your consciousness, and victory without struggle will be yours, for you will find your way through peace to light; whereas the other two passages, James 4:7 and I Peter 5:8, handle the mental arguments which are exactly that to which Mrs. Eddy refers in her definition of "Adversary" in the Glossary of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 580): "An adversary is one who opposes, denies, disputes, not one who constructs and sustains reality and Truth. Jesus said of the devil, 'He was a murderer from the beginning, . . . he is a liar and the father of it.' This view of Satan is confirmed by the name often conferred upon him in Scripture, the 'adversary.'"

The people of China are not so realistic in their theatrical productions as are Westerners. They depend largely as a matter of course upon the exercise of the imagination for all their effects. But to us it seems ridiculous to see a paper dagger pointed at a person two feet away become the cause of that one's immediate decease. Not more absurd is it, however, than for the human mind to submit to every spectral belief floating its way on the wings of some one's fancy, and promptly translate it into action. The rejection of it by intelligence is joyous.

Nevertheless, the temptation sometimes comes forcibly to the mortal mind to face false conditions which appear as realities with the attempt to withstand their encroachment upon experience by the use of merely stubborn assertions, insistent human concept launched against insistent human concept. This is truly the fight of beast with beast, though it may seem to be wholly in the mental arena of activity. Usually it is the endeavor to nullify an unpleasant effect without correcting the false inclination of human desire which had caused it. Error thus made easy increases. In such a case the externalized belief unerringly indicates two things: the individual's moral need and Love's active presence to meet it. So long as the undestroyed error remains hidden it will claim to produce agony somewhere along the line of human relationship, innocence oftentimes being seemingly victimized; and mastery apparently will rest with willfulness in such a battle, only to return upon its operator eventually, like the boomerang in the hands of a novice.

Over and over again practitioners are besought, by patients with such a thought, to "know" that certain outlined effects cannot appear, forgetful that exposure of sin's effects up to its rejection will lead to the revealing of the Son of God. If the practitioner discerns this to be the plea of error for a little longer indulgence, he will make it clear that the overcoming of sin is the only real Christian Science healing, from which there can be no relapse. Realization of this fact will secure the patient's loving response and quick healing. But if he succumbs to error's subtle plea by falling to the patient's level of belief, he may temporarily succeed in warding off certain results, only to have the conflict renewed in another phase until it is met rightly; for Christ Jesus' way is the only way, namely: Take the ground that neither error nor error's seemings can operate through or touch in any way the real man. By steadfast adherence to such an attitude you overcome even the false appearances.

The other Scriptural passages quoted are but explications of Jesus' rule, showing us how to demonstrate it: Be vigilant; nullify the opposing argument with Truth's affirmative, which contradicts every statement denying the truth of being as taught us in Christian Science; say a continual "Yes" to God and so "overcome evil with good;" that is, turn wholly to divine Love to enforce its own decrees. This phrase "with good" means literally "in good" and reminds us that Jesus' wonderful demonstrations were all made by his unreserved surrender to God.

The author of the epistle to the Hebrews, in a remarkable one sentence description of the mission of Jesus as the Way-shower to all humanity (Hebrews 5:7–10), reveals the secret of this triumphant manifestation in a few words. As given us in the King James version they read, "Was heard in that he feared," but a more literal rendering of these words, which are the metaphysical center of this wonderful sentence, is: Was heard for the taking of refuge. Evidently this writer who remembered that passage from the old world of ignorance and crime into the new one swept clean by the waters of Noah, related it as a type of Jesus' work for humanity, and perceived that the ark, which Jesus by his life proof made available for the passage of all mankind from the old world-beliefs of sin and suffering into the new order of love, joy, and peace, was his firm insistence on the allness of good, God, notwithstanding the flood of contradictory assertions that surged up against him. cellany Mrs. Eddy lovingly urges: "Improve every opportunity to correct sin through your own perfectness. When error strives to be heard above Truth, let the 'still small voice' produce God's phenomena. Meet dispassionately the raging element of individual hate and counteract its most gigantic falsities." This is what Jesus did.

Error of any description has no life or power. If we flee before its boastful assertions, then they that pursue us will be swift; if we try to "think up" ways to meet it, we have set up a straw man to be knocked down; if we shrink from and resist it, we are piercing ourselves with many sorrows. But if we form the habit of turning, at the first show of evil, submissively to the recognition of the allness of God, knowing that right there where evil seems to be is actually the highest activity of good, laden with blessings for us if we will but go out with love to meet it, then

"Heaven will shine upon our way
Not all at once but day by day."

Thus will be answered the prayer of our dear Leader (Miscellany, p. 132), "Oh, may this hour be prolific, and at this time and in every heart may there come this benediction: Thou hast no longer to appeal to human strength, to strive with agony; I am thy deliverer."

"Conscious identity"

MAUD WORCESTER MAKEMSON

WEARY of conflicting theories and wary of fair words that when tried in the balance are found wanting, mankind is demanding demonstrable facts in response to the age-old questions as to the identity, origin, and purpose of human life. Who am I? What am I here for? These are the problems which have vexed mankind through centuries of human existence and which, until the discovery of Christian Science by Mary Baker Eddy in 1866, had never been answered in a scientific, practical way. Christian Science teaches that man is the idea or reflection of God, and then proves the God qualities of health, holiness, harmony, and immortality in experience, healing the sick and freeing mankind from the bondage of fear, ignorance, sin, and sensuality. Such proof as this is incontestable.

In order to get a glimpse of the possibilities of man's being as the image and likeness of God, mortals must first awaken to the truth about God as divine Mind or Principle. In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 465) Mrs. Eddy has given the scientific synonyms for God as follows: "God is incorporeal, divine, supreme, infinite Mind, Spirit, Soul, Principle, Life, Truth, Love." Mortals cannot hope to comprehend the divine nature in a moment, for, since God is infinite, the understanding of Him is infinite and is the work of eternity. For the same reason, mortals cannot at once comprehend the nature of man in God's image and likeness, but must say with John, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is."

In speaking of man (Science and Health, p. 475), Mrs. Eddy says: "He is the compound idea of God, including all right ideas; the generic term for all that reflects God's image and likeness; the conscious identity of being as found in Science, in which man is the reflection of God, or Mind, and therefore is eternal; that which has no separate mind from God; that which has not a single quality underived from Deity; that which possesses no life, intelligence, nor creative power of his own, but reflects spiritually all that belongs to his Maker." It follows, then, that any identity which a man seems to have apart from God cannot be the true identity, but must be only false and illusive, the counterfeit of his identity as the son of God. Since God is Spirit, man's identity must be found in spirituality, and any seeming individuality of man in corporeal sense must be a wrong belief about his existence. Since God is Life, man's identity must be found in health and immortality, and any seeming connection between Life and sickness or death must be admitted to be a lie. Since God is Truth, man's identity must dwell in truth and honesty, so that dishonesty could find no abiding place there. Since God is Love, man's identity must be found in loving, not in hating; in faith, not in fear; and any denial of this fact, though amply supported by the evidence of the physical senses, must be denied as untrue. The allness of God, good, is the rock upon which man's conscious identity must be founded. Upon this rock the waves of corporeality dash to pieces, to fall back in utter impotence.

To mortal sense, a man seems to reflect a great many qualities and conditions that are admittedly not found in God. The physical senses testify that he manifests sickness, ignorance, fear, hate, and numerous other mortal beliefs. On page 223 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy declares, "Sooner or later we shall learn that the fetters of man's finite capacity are forged by the illusion that he lives in body instead of in Soul, in matter instead of in Spirit." Since the belief in matter as the creative element in which man originates, lives, and dies, has been the primal cause of mankind's discordant existence, it is evident that the correction of this falsity with the truth of man's identity as the son of God will entirely do away with all unreal, inharmonious conditions and reinstate man in his rightful place. What would prevent man from recognizing his true identity? Would God, the Father-Mother, whose very nature is Love? Only fear, ignorance, or the love of sin would claim to hinder man from demanding his just inheritance, and these monuments of mortal discord are found to crumble into dust as faith in their reality disappears. A man begins to make evident progress toward realizing the divine sonship when he understands that the chimeras of sickness, sin, and death never existed save in so-called mortal consciousness, and that it is right there that he must grapple with and overcome them. The vanquishing of the belief of life in matter must be accomplished by every mortal at some time or other, either now or later. Christ Jesus demonstrated as no other human being has ever done the nothingness of evil,—the omnipotence of good. The same Truth, Life, and Love which gave Jesus authority over all evil, gave Mary Baker Eddy the inspiration of Christian Science and the power to teach and prove the truth lived by Christ Jesus, in such a way that all mankind may understand and demonstrate it.

Every human being who enters upon the study of Christian Science free from false preconceptions, willing to receive the outpouring of Truth and Love with the simplicity of a little child, can demonstrate to his own ultimate satisfaction the statement of Paul: "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." It is the right of every individual to find his inheritance as the son of God, in health, abundance, harmony, holiness, and immortality, and to this end divine Love is hourly leading him.

Some idea of the conscious identity of man in the image of God is gained from the following statement in Science and Health (p. 265), "This scientific sense of being, forsaking matter for Spirit, by no means suggests man's absorption into Deity and the loss of his identity, but confers upon man enlarged individuality, a wider sphere of thought and action, a more expansive love, a higher and more permanent peace."

Intelligence

HENRY C. N. ELLIS

FROM time immemorial the human race has acknowledged, either consciously or unconsciously, the existence of some intelligence as compared with which it considered the human intellect to be nothing, and this acknowledgment has been a common feature of all shades of religious belief throughout history. Where these same religious beliefs have failed to achieve agreement, however, is in their efforts to ascertain the nature of that intelligence. Now the concept of such an intelligence as wholly evil would not be accepted, since fear would become the sole motive for right conduct under such a system of thinking, as it has proved to be in the past among certain primitive peoples until a better understanding arrived to alter the foundations of their beliefs. Even the Greeks and the Romans, materialistic as they may have been, held to no such view of the nature of intelligence, or God, but they, nevertheless, as many have done since, allowed in their calculations for the simultaneous existence of more than one supposed intelligence. So long as it was not claimed that either of these supposed intelligences was supreme, the theory was not so self-evident an absurdity as it appears to-day. When, however, in the course of human thought there was evolved a religious system based on the existence of an intelligence which was called supreme but which, it was supposed, either permitted itself to be thwarted by another intelligence not considered to be supreme, or permitted itself to think in a way that was manifestly unwise, even according to human standards, then the need for some new and consistent explanation of existence became very obvious,—as obvious as the recognition by thinking people that such theories contained within themselves no element of stability or progress.

At two points in the history of the world has its need in this respect been directly met and the only real foundation for clear thinking laid, by the revelation of intelligence as one limitless, omniscient, universal, eternal, omnipotent, divine Mind which is wholly good because it is God. The nature of this God, or Mind, is revealed in the Bible and in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, the book which revealed the true significance of the Bible to the world.

Throughout his earthly career Jesus did not cease to dwell upon nor to emphasize that God is the all-protecting wisdom which if utilized would relieve mankind of any seeming necessity for anxiety. According to his teaching, God is not limited in extent, quality, or availability, nor is it necessary for the individual to make a special effort lest his neighbor have more of it than himself. The availability of Mind for any individual does not depend upon how much of it is being utilized by his neighbor, for, being limitless, the potentialities of Mind cannot be exhausted by any individual. We must remember that Jesus said, "If ye continue in my word . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

The competitive element in human affairs was thus eliminated by Jesus from the sphere of Mind, on the basis of its ever present availability for all, and it is difficult to see how it could be otherwise if the definition of Mind as God is to be adhered to. Competition is based on self and the presumption that it is necessary and possible for one supposititious mind to acquire an advantage over another. Mind being one and indivisible, there can in reality be no competition in question at all, and it can only exist in thought as a misconception to be destroyed with the growth of understanding. As Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 88): "Thoughts, proceeding from the brain or from matter, are offshoots of mortal mind; they are mortal material beliefs. Ideas are spiritual, harmonious, and eternal."

All the teaching about the nature of God as Mind, to be found in Christian Science, corresponds with the Bible teaching. Christian Science asserts that if Mind is infinite it is impossible to have more than one mind. Not to comprehend this fact in such a way as to allow it to loose our mental shackles, is to lose hold on the grand fact that God is all. Speaking of intelligence, Mrs. Eddy says, "It is the primal and eternal quality of infinite Mind, of the triune Principle,—Life, Truth, and Love,—named God" (Science and Health, p. 469). Thus it is that students of the whole teaching of Jesus, which Mrs. Eddy has called Christian Science, have been and always are able in their school and college careers to overcome what appear to be insuperable obstacles in the way of progress, obstacles camouflaged as positive realities and calling themselves lack of time, ignorance, incapacity, and physical unfitness. "You lean on the inert and unintelligent, never discerning how this deprives you of the available superiority of divine Mind," stated the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science (Science and Health, p. 143), in speaking of those who fail to avail themselves of the enlightenment that Truth brings to the student in regard to the real origin, power, and nature of intelligence. Before these seeming obstacles, no one need feel helpless, for in Science and Health we read (p. 143), "Mind is the grand creator, and there can be no power except that which is derived from Mind."

"My son, give me thine heart"

RITA CURRIE

TO every student of Christian Science there comes a time of development when he has to give up his dependence on human relationship and friendship, and to turn his thoughts to the realization of what Mrs. Eddy says on page 151 of "Miscellaneous Writings": "God is our Father and our Mother, our Minister and the great Physician. He is man's only real relative on earth and in heaven." Perchance he has come mentally to a place where his human sense of friendship has betrayed him. The path seems dark to him and he sees no way of escape. If he is listening for the voice of Truth he may dimly hear the divine command: "My son, give me thine heart." Error, however, whispers that he is not ready to give up his human joys; one friend has disappointed him but perhaps another would prove more faithful; later on he may be ready, but not yet. He turns aside and his path grows darker, clouds lower, and the night is cold; but ever and more insistently that inward voice is speaking, sometimes admonishing, often tenderly entreating, "My son, give me thine heart," and again, "Thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine." As Truth's voice grows clearer and more imperative, the student turns at last with humble trustfulness to God, and puts his life into His keeping, lays his human sense of love aside, and proves in humility and gratitude the truth of Mrs. Eddy's words, "Divine Love always has met and always will meet every human need" (Science and Health, page 494), and lo, and behold! his difficulties have vanished, his pathway is plain before him,—new work, new interests, and joys surround him; in knowing God, divine Love, as his only Friend, he recognizes the infinity of Love and of Love's reflection, and realizes that all is eternally his.

The student does not gain heaven through one such experience, but each surrender of human will and dependence on material belief brings him a stage farther on his journey from material sense to spiritual reality. Thenceforward, his human sense of friendship being purified, he knows that, in proportion to the purity of his own vision, he will himself reflect and will look for and find the true sense of friendship reflected everywhere.

The Certain Sound of Truth

GERTRUDE J. PERKS

IN the fourteenth chapter of I Corinthians Paul says, "If the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to the battle?" Paul is pointing out in this chapter how important it is to have a clear and definite understanding of Truth, a knowledge and understanding of that Principle which is always Love and which, being God, is always good, therefore producing thoroughly certain sounds.

For those in the world to-day who are believing in many minds and listening to uncertain sounds, nothing is stable or definite. Believing equally in evil as in good, they are therefore confused. It is this dual condition, this belief in good and evil, that the apostle James tells us is unstable in all its ways,—double-mindedness. Good and evil cannot abide together. Mrs. Eddy tells us in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 270), "If one is real, the other must be unreal." While believing both these opposites real, we have no standard before us, we are longing for something steadfast, but cannot find it, whichever way we turn; we stand on the shifting sands of human belief, and fear is the result, causing us to act wildly and at random. When believing that there are as many minds as there are people, we spend time in thinking what will be done, and in trying to get away from something disagreeable, always replacing evil with evil; or, indulging in some desire either in accordance with another mind or against it, we are spent in an effort to bring about what seems good to us, but which another may, with equal assurance, believe is evil. Indulging in such erroneous thinking, we make no progress but work ever around in a circle, in a maze of desires, always striving to force our desires upon others, who seem to have a wish to enforce their desires upon us, and thus we are tossed to and fro, like a weaver's shuttle.

In the allegory in Genesis, it was the fruit of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil that caused Adam and Eve to be turned out of the Garden of Eden, while the sword of Truth guarded the gateway which led back into the paradise of good. Truth gives no uncertain sound; there is nothing indefinite or unstable in Truth. It is the knowledge of God and His creation, a true, exact knowledge of all that really is. There are not many minds. There is one Mind and that Mind is always good. Did not Christ Jesus say, "If therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light"? In Truth, man being idea in divine Mind can only be conscious of that Mind and what that Mind knows.

It is then incumbent upon us to turn out all thoughts that are not in accordance with the Mind of Christ, so that we may realize our true selfhood and hear clearly the certain sound of Truth. How is this to be done? Doing evil in the name of good is not the way! We must try our thoughts, examine them, whether they be of God, or whether they are a mixture of good and evil, and they will be found to be worthless in proportion to the belief in evil that is found in them, for thoughts which come from God are purely good. They are reflections of God, reflections of Life, Truth, and Love, and they bring forth the fruits of the Spirit, expressed in loving-kindness, humility, fidelity, honesty, trustworthiness, and every other quality which emanates from God. None of these are uncertain in sound. If we are not sure that our thought is free from belief in evil, let us take no step till that thought is brought into accord with the Mind of Christ. Wishing to do right is not enough; it is thinking and acting in accordance with the one Mind, and it is nothing short of that, which is enough.

Evil belongs to no person, place, or thing; it is nothing trying to be something. If it can get attached to persons, it seems to work, but not belonging to the one Mind, God, its seeming work is powerless, and can only seem to harm those who believe in it and listen to its arguments. These arguments come as suggestions and are taken in by those who are not awake and watchful to detect error, and humble enough to reflect God. Mrs. Eddy says in Miscellany (p. 201), "Rich hope have I in him who says in his heart:—

I will listen for Thy voice,
Lest my footsteps stray;
I will follow and rejoice
All the rugged way."

Giving Testimony

GERTRUDE GOODING MC CLOUD

WHEN our Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, provided that all Christian Science churches should hold Wednesday evening meetings, she made it possible for every one who has been benefited by Christian Science to give to others a "reason of the hope that is in" him, a measure of the joy that has come to him through the application of the rules of divine Principle, as taught in the Christian Science textbook.

It behooves each one of us who wishes to have his share in fulfilling the purpose of these meetings, to remember that many times there are present at the services people who are listening for the first time to testimonies of Christian Science healing, perhaps some who have not read any of the authorized literature of the movement, and who, therefore, will not understand some of the expressions that are so familiar to Scientists themselves that unconsciously they use them so freely as to confuse the thought of those who are not accustomed to hear them used in a Christianly scientific way. If we keep this in mind, we shall be sure to state facts as clearly and concisely as possible, give careful thought to the phraseology we use, and endeavor to show the ordinary use of words in relation to the scientific sense, whenever possible.

Our first object is to show that it is the understanding of the absolute Science taught and demonstrated by Jesus and explained to us in this age in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, that has accomplished the healing of which we tell. If we simply state that we have been healed by having faith in God, our words may lead some one to believe that a blind faith in a corporeal God will in time bring healing to a sick body or mind. A positive statement that it is the demonstrable Science contained in our textbook that has wrought the cure, is necessary to maintain the object of the meeting.

Another mistake against which to guard is that of dwelling unnecessarily upon details of discord and disease in such a way as to form mental pictures of discordant conditions in the thoughts of listeners who have not yet learned how to protect themselves effectually against them. In the Manual of The Mother Church, Mrs. Eddy has given explicit instructions concerning this: "Testimony in regard to the healing of the sick is highly important. More than a mere rehearsal of blessings, it scales the pinnacle of praise and illustrates the demonstration of Christ, 'who healeth all thy diseases' (Psalm 103:3). This testimony, however, shall not include a description of symptoms or of suffering, though the generic name of the disease may be indicated. This By-Law applies to testimonials which appear in the periodicals and to those which are given at the Wednesday evening meeting" (Art. VIII, Sect. 24). Careful study of and obedience to these instructions will eliminate the possibility of nullifying the effect of what should be a helpful testimony. It will also make us realize that it is unnecessary for us to relate at length experiences we may have had in the churches with which we were affiliated before we came to Christian Science.

One more thing worth mentioning in connection with this important activity of our church is the unwillingness we sometimes feel to testify publicly to what we are glad to tell to personal friends and acquaintances at other times,—and sometimes in far less suitable places than a church edifice. Often a fear is voiced that those more experienced in public speaking may criticize our efforts, or that there may be those present who will not believe some of the wonderful things we wish to tell. If we look these excuses fairly in the face, we shall see that they are merely error's advocates trying to prevent us from giving and receiving the blessings that are a sure result of sharing with others the good we have ourselves received. We know that even if these suppositions are correct,—and they may not be,—we are not testifying alone for the benefit of those who come to criticize and doubt, but for those who are seeking relief of mind or body and hungering for the crumbs of comfort which we have the opportunity and ability to give them. It is possible, too, that the word of Truth rightly presented even to the unbelieving, may find unexpected lodgment and in time lead that one to become receptive to the divine idea revealed in the light of Christian Science, and to understand the meaning of the words so dear to the heart of every Christian Scientist: "With God all things are possible."

When we realize that divine Mind gives to man intelligence and ability to do His work effectively, that Love casts out fear, and that we can do nothing of ourselves, then we shall be,—indeed already are,—able to give a testimony that is redolent with gratitude and unselfishness, tempered by wisdom, and convincing because of its spontaneity and sincerity.

ESTELLA S. THOMPSON

O trusting heart, look up and see
The glorious home prepared for thee;
A home so free from mortal strife,
Where Love is all and God is Life;

A home above all sin and care—
No fear nor doubt can enter there;
A home where tears are wiped away:
No night is there; 'tis always day.

O home of Spirit, ever blest,
Where God's dear children find their rest!
Oh, may we rise above all strife,
Where Love is all and God is Life.

["Progress"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., June 23, 1920]

The present world upheaval in religion, politics, and in all the affairs of men is a condition to rejoice the heart of the true metaphysician. It is a sign of Emmanuel, God with us. Nothing less than the tremendous injection of Truth which Christian Science has brought into the world could have caused this progressive condition in which old things are seen to pass away and all things become new. The student of Christian Science realizes that all is infinite Mind and that there is no action, propulsion, nor dynamic force outside of the Mind which is God; he recognizes that what is viewed with dismay by the human mind is but the destruction of false belief, which destruction sets free, and is one with the unfoldment of good. The Scriptures abound with passages which should enable the present day thinker to analyze correctly the upheaval which is taking place. Reading thoughtfully Jesus' warning to the Pharisees, "O ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs of the times?" should be enough to awaken those who look upon the present stir with consternation; and the words from the Old Testament, "As thy days, so shall thy strength be," and many other Scriptural texts give assurance that the truth which has caused this upheaval is always more powerful than the seeming opposition which it calls forth.

The writings of Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer of Christian Science, throughout explain the upheaval caused by the action of Truth upon error; pages 96 through 99 of Science and Health, especially, define the situation in which the world finds itself to-day, including on page 98, "The prophet of to-day beholds in the mental horizon the signs of these times, the reappearance of the Christianity which heals the sick and destroys error, and no other sign shall be given." And on page 53, Mrs. Eddy, speaking of a similar experience during Jesus' time, says, "The world could not interpret aright the discomfort which Jesus inspired and the spiritual blessings which might flow from such discomfort." It is well to be watchful in these days properly to interpret the signs of these times, to learn and to remain steadfast in the understanding that the only activity is the activity of the one Mind. If in seeing the breaking up of false beliefs we accept the mortal view and are deceived by the erroneous suggestion that evil is doing aught, except as it seems stirred to resistance by the approach of Truth understood, in that moment we are enthroning evil as power. He who understands the truth of being as taught by Christian Science must always rejoice.

Because the world has entered upon a new stage of experience it is necessary to take cognizance of that fact in order to meet the demands of this hour. The mental conflict has followed speedily the close of the material phase of Armageddon. The so-called forces of evil, having failed in the use of material means, renew their suppositional efforts by aggressive mental suggestion. As the understanding of Truth rises higher, the claims of evil, in their attempts to counterfeit, assume new and less understood forms. The following example may serve to illustrate: When the material belief that certain individuals cannot thrive in certain places, because of the atmosphere or climate, has been destroyed through an understanding of Christian Science, this belief can never again be accepted by the one who has seen its nothingness, but the suggestion may come in changed form that there is an unhealthy mental atmosphere, that corrupt thought abounds in certain places so as to threaten one's very life. Such a claim is of course the very opposite of the truth and has no foundation in fact, but in dealing with it one should note that the suggestion has changed from the temptation to believe in material substance, as a power apart from God, to the temptation to believe in an evil mind, as a power apart from God. Christian Science shows us that there are no counterfeit activities capable of forming a basis of action or possessing real entity.

Mary Baker Eddy, after proving the utter falsity of the claim that matter is substance, explains the suppositional activity of aggressive mental suggestion, but she uncovered these falsities only to show their absolute nothingness. Evil being impotent not only can do nothing, it cannot even start anything. All down the ages Truth has been marching on undisturbed and unchecked despite the suppositional resistance which appears continually to vaunt itself. In every battle for freedom, however, freedom has always won because it is a part of Truth. Thus the so-called thrusts of evil at the advancing spiritual idea never accomplish anything but the destruction of the evil itself. Even the crucifixion did not destroy anything, it only revealed the resurrection. Man's oneness with the Father, God, Spirit, understood as the truth of being, can never be gainsaid or resisted, and anything that sets itself up to obstruct the revelation of this great fact must go down before the onrush of the understanding of Principle, the only power there is.

Turning to Christian Science does not mean that we are to be spared one individual experience nor does it mean that we are not to be tempted in all points, but this great truth which has been revealed to this age, the allness of God and the unreality of evil, enables one through this knowledge to be not "overcome of evil," but to "overcome evil with good." On page 9 of "Unity of Good," Mrs. Eddy writes: "What is the cardinal point of the difference in my metaphysical system? This: that by knowing the unreality of disease, sin, and death, you demonstrate the allness of God." Recognizing that false belief alone suffers and that all that can be lost is a false sense of things, the Christian metaphysician sees in the present readjustment only progress and so will enjoy the peace described by Isaiah in the words, "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee: because he trusteth in thee."

[Aaron E. Brandt in Harrisburg (Pa.) Leader]

The clergyman who attacked Christian Science in a recent issue, calling it a false philosophy and a lie, has unwittingly applied these offensive terms to the teaching of Christ Jesus. Mrs. Eddy discovered that Jesus' teaching is a demonstrable science, and properly called it Christian Science. There is nothing in Christian Science doctrine which is not based upon and logically drawn from Jesus' teaching and practice. That this is true is proved by its fruits in healing all manner of sickness and disease, the very proof Jesus demanded as evidence of discipleship. Christianity must be scientific for the very reason Mrs. Eddy gave in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," on page 342. "If Christianity is not scientific," she wrote, "and Science is not of God, then there is no invariable law, and truth becomes an accident."

When one teaching answers the test Christ Jesus gave and others do not, there is only one logical conclusion to be drawn therefrom, and this conclusion, through Mrs. Eddy's discovery, has elevated the practice of Christianity to-day above superstition and skepticism, and above mere preaching, to a practical science available in all human problems. In other words, it works out the salvation of mankind here and now as Jesus meant that it should.

The critic's supposition that sin, disease, and death are ignored in Christian Science as "figments of the imagination and hallucinations of the carnal mind" must be rather amusing to any Christian Scientist who has healed what were considered by physicians as serious and incurable diseases. Permit me to say that the healing is not done by such ignorance. Any one knows that, to the human consciousness, disease is no more a figment of the imagination than is a collision with a post, such as is recommended by the critic. To heal disease, however, by an understanding that God is the only creator, as the Bible teaches, and that He created nothing but what is spiritual, good, and eternal, is quite another matter, for it is based on scientific truth. It is a knowledge of this truth which Christ Jesus said would make mankind free, and it is the same truth which enabled him to detect in consciousness the latent sin which caused disease, and to heal it or cast it out. This truth cannot be learned by any number of collisions with a post.

"There is no material truth," wrote Mrs. Eddy in Science and Health (p. 273). "The physical senses can take no cognizance of God and spiritual Truth. Human belief has sought out many inventions, but not one of them can solve the problem of being without the divine Principle of divine Science. Deductions from material hypotheses are not scientific. They differ from real Science because they are not based on the divine law."

[Louis A. Gregory in Hastings (Neb.) Tribune]

To trust God alone for healing, except as a last resort, is stupendous folly, according to the revivalist whom the Tribune quoted to the effect that praying for the sick without calling a doctor is as presumptuous as was Satan's temptation of Jesus to cast himself down from the pinnacle of the temple and expect God to save him from death. Neither Bible teaching nor practical experience supports such doctrine. An incident typical of Old Testament teaching concerning healing is that of King Asa, of whom the record states: "In his disease he sought not to the Lord but to the physicians . . . and died." The only mention of the work of physicians in the New Testament is concerning the woman who, Mark's gospel says, "had suffered many things of many physicians, and had spent all that she had, and was nothing bettered, but rather grew worse." Instead of indicating that she had qualified for healing by exhausting the aid of the physicians, Jesus told her that it was her faith that made her whole. The gospels relate that the Savior healed great multitudes of all manner of diseases, and there is no intimation that they had to try all the doctors' remedies before he could help them. Never once did he fail to heal because the seeker had not tried all possible medical help. Christ Jesus left nothing to indicate that the healing work, which he promised as one of the signs of his ever presence, must wait until all materialistic means have failed. Obviously it is not Christian teaching to represent that God is as limited, as a healer, as are our famous physicians who do not treat minor cases but deal only with chronic and desperate ones.

Present day, practical proof contradicts the assertion of the revivalist that it is foolish to disregard medical men and their methods and trust God alone for healing. Experience shows that habitual reliance upon drugs and medical methods is a line of education that hinders one from effectively trusting God for healing, even when human means have failed. When an adherent of materia medica finds that its remedies do not help him, and turns to God, he generally does so in desperation, as though he were casting himself down from the pinnacle of the temple, and not in the intelligent and confident trust in God that Jesus taught and exemplified.

Most of those whose first appeal to Christian Science was for physical healing, came to it only as a last resort; but they learn and generally prove that that was not necessary, for this Science is demonstrably most effective as a first and only resort. They are proving that reliance upon doctors and drugs for smaller ills does not prepare them to trust God in a way that heals them of seeming mortal disease. As they demonstrate the psalmist's statement that it is God, "who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases," they learn that there are no degrees of evil or disease in His sight, that seemingly great evils are as readily healed through spiritual power as are any others, and that it is important that the apparently small ones should be rightly corrected.

One statement on this subject, out of the many in the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, is the following (p. 143): "It is plain that God does not employ drugs or hygiene, nor provide them for human use; else Jesus would have recommended and employed them in his healing. The sick are more deplorably lost than the sinning, if the sick cannot rely on God for help and the sinning can. The divine Mind never called matter medicine, and matter required a material and human belief before it could be considered as medicine" (p. 143). In her book, "Unity of Good" (p. 9), Mrs. Eddy makes it a cardinal point in spiritual healing "that by knowing the unreality of disease, sin, and death, you demonstrate the allness of God."

[James M. Stevens in Journal-News, Two Harbors, Minn.]

Christian Science is derided and maligned by two classes of persons,—those who for ulterior motives knowingly and willfully misrepresent it, and those who in their misguided zeal believe that they are rendering a service to God and to mankind in so doing. Unquestionably, most ministers who deliver sermons on Christian Science belong to the latter class. Being so convinced of the correctness of their own version of the Bible, they are unable to conceive of a possibility of the correctness of any other interpretation. Zeal is a very commendable virtue, but misguided zeal often causes much temporary harm to innocent persons and much later regret and humble repenting on the part of the overzealous one. Saul in his zeal to live "after the most straitest sect" of his religion, breathed out "threatenings and slaughter" against the early Christians. Later with deep regret for his overzealous acts, he became with much humility one of these same despised Christians. Some ministers of the gospel who have been vitriolic in their denunciation of Christian Science, have later, when the "light from heaven" has come to them "in the way," become sincere adherents of the religion they have maligned. Jesus, in speaking to his disciples about those who were overzealous in their religious beliefs, said: "They shall put you out of the synagogues: yea, the time cometh, that whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service," and then he gave the reason for their false zeal: "And these things will they do unto you, because they have not known the Father, nor me."

Jesus spent many hours teaching his disciples of God and of himself. By precept and example he demonstrated what the life of a Christian should be. He healed the sick, reclaimed the sinner, comforted the sorrowing, and left specific commands for his followers to do likewise. He bade them "cast out devils," "heal the sick." He not only commanded his followers to do the works which he had done, but he left the comforting assurance, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also;" and that others might know whether his professed followers were indeed true followers, he left a definite standard by which they might be judged: "By their fruits ye shall know them."

God is Love, and one can know God only as he makes love the dominating influence of his every thought and act, only as he learns to love as Jesus loved. Resentment, jealousy, prejudice, arrogance, pride, and vainglory had no place in Jesus' life. Patience, meekness, tenderness, compassion, humility, and love are the qualities which he manifested. To his overzealous defender he said, "Put up thy sword," and for his tormentors he prayed, "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." His work was a constructive work. He did not attempt to tear down and destroy, but taught and practiced a religion which was at all times healing and regenerating; and by this religion he established health where before there had been sickness and disease, purity where sin and evil had reigned, joy and happiness where sorrow and sadness had held sway. Jesus' words and deeds manifested a true understanding of God.

A correct understanding of Christian Science necessitates the right understanding of God and of Jesus the Christ. Unquestionably Jesus had the right understanding of God and the true knowledge of himself. The Christian Science teaching concerning God is the same as Jesus taught concerning God; its teaching concerning Jesus the Christ is the same as Jesus taught concerning himself; its teaching concerning evil is identical with Jesus' teaching concerning evil; and its healings are accomplished in precisely the same way as Jesus' healings were accomplished. If any one doubts this, let him take his Bible and learn what Jesus taught concerning God, what he taught concerning himself, and what he taught concerning evil. Then let him make practical application of this knowledge as taught in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" and he will be able to heal, in proportion to his understanding, as Jesus healed. The extent of his ability to heal sin, sickness, and sorrow will prove the extent of his understanding of God. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

The world to-day wants a practical religion. Simply to deride or malign another's religion does not satisfy thinking people. They are demanding, and rightly, the spirit as well as the name of Christianity. They want to know the truth about God, "who healeth all thy diseases;" they want to know the truth about the "kingdom of God," not as a remote future possibility, but as "within you"—a present, practical reality. Humanity is hungry for the simple, direct, healing, and regenerating religion which Jesus practiced, and which he taught to his disciples. The clergy have an opportunity such as they have never had before in the history of the world, if they will but put aside petty differences and rise to the opportunity which is before them. The words of Mrs. Eddy as found on page 235 of Science and Health are especially applicable at this time: "Clergymen, occupying the watchtowers of the world, should uplift the standard of Truth. They should so raise their hearers spiritually, that their listeners will love to grapple with a new, right idea and broaden their concepts. Love of Christianity, rather than love of popularity, should stimulate clerical labor and progress. Truth should emanate from the pulpit, but never be strangled there. A special privilege is vested in the ministry. How shall it be used? Sacredly, in the interests of humanity, not of sect."

The Leaves of the Tree

THE book of Revelation resembles Science and Health in this, that it is, among other things, an attempt to make clear the existing Scripture to the contemporary thought of the period in which it was written. For this reason a large part of the book is devoted to the exegesis of parts of the Old Testament; and consequently when the writer refers, in the last chapter, to the tree of life, it is impossible not to remember the earlier reference to the same tree in the book of Genesis: "And out of the ground made the Lord God to grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food; the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, and the tree of knowledge of good and evil." What, in short, the writer was engaged in doing was making plain to the readers of his century the words of allegory of the Jhvhistic document of the Hexateuch.

The leaves of this tree of life, the writer of Revelation points out to his readers, were for the healing of the nations: "In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month: and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations." Now the word "nations" has, of course, a distinct doctrinal significance. In the Old Testament the word was originally invariably used for the non-Israelitish people, and on the whole this distinction is maintained in the New. At the same time, the tendency grew among the later writers of the Old Testament to use the expression in a somewhat wider sense, and this sense broadened out in the New Testament until the word came to mean the universalism of Christianity. Thus the healing of the nations no doubt meant that the leaves of the tree of life would bring the healing of Christianity to all those by whom they were metaphorically eaten. The writer of Revelation had, however, an unquestionably different sense of life to any conceivable by a Hebrew of the day when the Jhvhistic document was composed. The older Hebrew never troubled himself about the salvation of the heathen. It took the teaching of Christ Jesus to convince his Hebrew followers of the equal necessity for this, nor was the lesson accepted in a moment. The writer of Revelation unquestionably had a much broader sense of life than anything possible to the writers of the Pentateuch. To him life was spiritual, or it was nothing. He had evidently treasured in his heart the famous saying of Jesus to Nicodemus, when the ruler came to him by night, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit," and he knew how his great Master had defined eternal or spiritual life as a knowledge of God and of the Christ. Therefore the tree of life became to him the understanding of Principle and of man in the image and likeness of Principle, and it was the knowledge of Principle to be gained through a metaphysical understanding of what life is, which he symbolizes in the leaves of the tree of life which were for the healing of the nations.

Healing, then, it is perfectly clear, to the understanding of John could come only through an understanding of Principle; and this, surely, is just what Mrs. Eddy means when, on page 526 of Science and Health, writing of this very passage in Revelation, she says, "The 'tree of life' stands for the idea of Truth, and the sword which guards it is the type of divine Science." Truth, it need hardly be said, is inseparable from Life and inseparable from Love; in fact, there is no difference whatever between the three words, which are all used by Mrs. Eddy as synonyms for God or Principle. The healing of the nations, consequently, was to be brought about by a scientific understanding of Life, Truth, and Love, in a way made clear enough by Peter, in the statement, "According as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue;" for the Greek of this passage makes it perfectly clear that the knowledge, to which the writer refers, is no human knowledge such as that of good and evil, but the scientific knowledge of good alone, a statement which, once again, Mrs. Eddy makes clear in writing, in the paragraph already quoted from, "The 'tree of knowledge' stands for the erroneous doctrine that the knowledge of evil is as real, hence as God-bestowed, as the knowledge of good."

It is perfectly clear, then, both from the New Testament and from Science and Health, that all healing which is true healing must be gained through a scientific understanding of Life as spiritual. But this scientific understanding can never be acquired so long as the student is living in a way which makes matter an enjoyable reality to him. That is why all Christian Science demonstration is brought about through a joint effort to gain an understanding heart and to attain to purity of life. No man scientifically knows Life to be spiritual who is indulging the passions or appetites of matter. He may argue that he so believes it to be, but he certainly does not know it, otherwise he would be striving with all his might to repudiate these passions and appetites. A man knows dust to be materially valueless, and therefore does not put out his hand to accumulate the dust which he can have for nothing; but a man does not know the appetites and passions which make up human existence to be valueless, except in the proportion in which they become to him as valueless as dust. As a consequence, every person who really understands anything of Principle knows that his power to judge righteous judgment is in the exact ratio of his realization of the nothingness of those passions, which so unbalance the human mind as to make it entirely unable to judge righteous judgment,—that is, to separate the things which be of God from the things which be of men.

This being so, Jesus sent out his disciples not only to preach the gospel but to heal the sick. In other words, they were to prove their demonstration of Truth. From that day to this, real metaphysical healing has been the test always of the individual's understanding of what he preaches. Christ Jesus stood out before the whole world as the founder of the Christian religion, not merely because he preached those marvelous sermons to mankind, which carried conviction in every line of them, not only because he taught as no man had ever taught before, but because he proved by his practice every word to which he gave utterance. He was not satisfied by saying that substance was spiritual,—he proved it when he fed the multitudes; it was not enough for him to declare that death was unreal,—he demonstrated it in the gateway at Nain and in the garden at Bethany; nor did he rest content with insistence upon the nothingness of matter,—he walked upon the water, and stilled the tempest to show that his statement was in accordance with divine Science.

To-day the nations are asking, as perhaps they never have asked before, for healing, and there is one way and one way only in which healing can be given to them. It is through the leaves of the tree of life. Men who have turned aside from the sacred charge to preach the gospel and to heal the sick, in order to waste their time in demonstrating before the world that the passions of the flesh are still rampant, are merely engaged in demonstrating their disbelief in Principle. For if Principle is Principle, healing lies in an understanding of Principle, and in nothing else. "The Bible," Mrs. Eddy writes, on page 406 of Science and Health, "contains the recipe for all healing. 'The leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations.' Sin and sickness are both healed by the same Principle."

The Pilgrims

RESOLVING to have full freedom in which to worship God, one must be a true pilgrim, a seeker who is turning away from a material sense of things to the breadth of real spirituality. Instead of thinking of himself as dwelling in any earthly place, or even in any mortal body, he rejoices that his unbounded habitation is Mind, where there is infinite action. This does not mean that any one should be encouraged merely to wander aimlessly over the face of the earth, for mortal wandering is a delusive counterfeit of the glad spiritual activity which is the truth of pilgrimage, in its broadest sense. It does mean that each one is entitled to reduce to nothingness every sort of supposed limitation. In order to do so, he must have real breadth of vision. The very knowing that the divine Mind is present to direct in every way enables such a one to have exactly what he needs. To him, the promised land is here and now in proportion as he understands and accepts the real consciousness as his eternal abiding place. Breadth of comprehension and happy earnestness of purpose come wholly from the one divine Mind, which alone can be truly conscious of anything.

Freedom to worship God is, of course, what every one desires. Even the man who is busy with what he calls research in the laboratory is trying to learn something about cause and effect. In the end, however, that one has to cease his attempts to learn from matter, and find the truth that cause is always Mind. The divine Mind, or God, is the only cause for real living. Acceptance of this Mind as the only cause is the genuine worship of God. Once a man recognizes and is satisfied with this fact, he is eager to demonstrate it day by day in all that he does. Infinite intelligence causing infinite order is the truth about law. Freedom to understand and act in accord with this fact is all that true pilgrims have ever been seeking. In the words of the psalmist, "Thy statutes have been my songs in the house of my pilgrimage." The joyous comprehension and utilization of the divine law, one perfect cause producing right action, must be the aim of every pilgrim.

With this aim, it did not merely happen that those whom we call the Pilgrims came to America. What they were looking for was not just a material land in which to be materially active. They were seeking an ideal, putting forth their efforts that they might really see divine intelligence expressed in just the way that they could understand freely. The turning of attention in any measure to Principle and away from a material sense of things means success and permanence. Every glimpse of the truth is sure to unfold until nothing even seems to oppose the allness of that divine Love which is Principle. As Mrs. Eddy says on page 10 of "Pulpit and Press": "Rome's fallen fanes and silent Aventine is glory's tomb; her pomp and power lie low in dust. Our land, more favored, had its Pilgrim Fathers. On shores of solitude, at Plymouth Rock, they planted a nation's heart,—the rights of conscience, imperishable glory. No dream of avarice or ambition broke their exalted purpose, theirs was the wish to reign in hope's reality—the realm of Love."

Through spiritual discernment Mrs. Eddy has shown throughout her work how imperishable is the true right of conscience for which the Pilgrims were so zealous. It is every man's right to accept as real only the one true consciousness, or Mind, and its idea. Nothing can ever alienate this right. No matter what people or supposed forces of any sort may think, the one divine intelligence remains the only cause. All real activity, all that constitutes real pilgrimage or really constructive work of any sort, is for the purpose of showing forth Truth. The only progress is the unfoldment of the infinite divine Mind. Each one must be gladly conscientious in his knowing of this, in order to celebrate rightly the one Principle which always has been the sole governing power. On page 176 of "Miscellaneous Writings" Mrs. Eddy says: "The day we celebrate reminds us of the heroes and heroines who counted not their own lives dear to them, when they sought the New England shores, not as the flying nor as conquerors, but, steadfast in faith and love, to build upon the rock of Christ, the true idea of God—the supremacy of Spirit and the nothingness of matter. When first the Pilgrims planted their feet on Plymouth Rock, frozen ritual and creed should forever have melted away in the fire of love which came down from heaven. The Pilgrims came to establish a nation in true freedom, in the rights of conscience."

To celebrate rightly the coming of the Pilgrims to America, with all that this has meant and must mean to the whole world, all must understand and practice more of the "true freedom, in the rights of conscience." The pioneer work of the Pilgrims is still for our benefit. It will continue to bless us infinitely as each one for himself proves the logical sequence of that work, the ceaseless unfoldment of the divine Mind's government. The first right of conscience is the free privilege of knowing only what the one consciousness knows, of rejoicing in divine intelligence as the sole cause for true being. Each one celebrates the presence of this right by demonstrating the one cause throughout his experience. It is ever a joy to be a pilgrim, in the best sense of the word, to reject materiality once and for all for Spirit manifest, to be wholly active for Principle. The covenant is established that the real man is forever given the land of his pilgrimage, the completely harmonious divine consciousness, as his dwelling place. This one true place of activity is eternal and infinite, free for all who turn in the right direction and worship the only God there is. Its present availability is undeniable. Thus every student of Christian Science is bound to appreciate the aim and the achievement of the true pilgrim.

The Lectures

BATAVIA, N. Y. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Charles Beilstein, who said in part:—

Christian Science lectures are given in order to make known that its teachings are not some strange, mysterious thing, but the simple teachings of Christ Jesus applied to human needs. The religion of Jesus of Nazareth was a living, pulsating truth, which not only spread the gospel but healed the sick. The constant cry of mankind throughout all time has been for health, happiness, peace, and progress. To-day it is a matter of vital importance to each and every one to gain a higher, more spiritual understanding of God and man.

CHICAGO, ILL. (Fifth Church).—Lecturer introduced by Henry J. Armstrong, who said in part:—

To a world struggling in the darkness of materialism, Christian Science has come as a revelation founded on the teachings of the Bible, that God, Spirit, is the only cause and creator, and therefore man and the universe are not material but spiritual. The realization of this great truth as taught in Christian Science, is freeing multitudes from the bondage of materialism, and bringing them into "the glorious liberty of the children of God."

CAPE TOWN, SOUTH AFRICA (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by R. B. Hendry, who said in part:—

We are to-day on the threshold of a new era. Mankind is reaching out for greater freedom. Systems and conditions which have obtained perhaps for generations are being thrust aside, unless they can prove their utility to-day. Even with improved material conditions, great numbers of men and women are still unsatisfied and are weighed down by the burdens of sin, sorrow, and disease, ignorant how to obtain their freedom.

Christian Science shows us clearly how these conditions can be overcome by relying wholly on one divine Principle, God, in the way which Jesus taught and demonstrated.

AUSTIN, TEXAS (Society).—Lecturer introduced by Albert McDonald, who said in part:—

Never in all our history was there a greater need for a better understanding of God than at the present time. Jesus said, "The kingdom of God is within you," and he also said, "If ye continue in my word . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." The truth about God is what we need to know; is what we all want to know. Christian Science is meeting the world's great need by teaching its followers the spirit of Truth that sets us free from sin, sickness, lack, and limitation, and that the kingdom of heaven is within us. Christian Science also teaches absolute reliance on God, increasing man's faith in the power and efficacy of prayer.

PONCA CITY, OKLA. (Society).—Lecturer introduced by Joseph C. DeWitt, who said in part:—

Christian Science is a religion which has, for the past half century, done much to restore to this age the practical healing and saving power exercised by Jesus Christ, his disciples, and the apostles. After three centuries, however, his healing method was lost sight of, and it was not until Mrs. Eddy rediscovered the fundamental rule of this scientific Christianity, in the year 1866, that it was again practiced and demonstrated as Jesus commanded. The movement she founded and named Christian Science, has drawn to it and restored to soundness such a vast number of those who were formerly on the brink of the grave that the world is awakening to the fact that Jesus' commands and promises are again being fulfilled. How this is done is contained in the teachings of Christian Science.

CODY, WYO. (Society).—Lecturer introduced by Mrs. Maud I. Murray, who said in part:—

Fifty years ago there was in the whole world but one Christian Scientist, a quiet, but deeply religious woman of middle age, who had all her life been considered a hopeless invalid. Early in her fortieth year she was instantaneously healed of a so-called fatal injury, through the revelation of God's infinite love. Her book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," contains a full statement of her discovery of the Christ-science. In the half century which followed, Christian Science has grown and spread over the whole world, until it numbers its believers by the thousands, and its churches are to be found in every civilized country on the globe.

CHARLESTON, W. VA. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Wade H. Guthrie, who said in part:—

There are very few persons in the civilized world to-day who are not familiar with the first two words of the Lord's Prayer; namely, "Our Father." We know from a material standpoint exactly what the word Father means—an expression of our highest concept of relationship. From a spiritual standpoint it has not meant much, if anything, that could be understood and applied in such a way that would be of help to us in solving our daily problems and enable us to see direct results from our use of it. Christian Science, as taught and demonstrated by Mary Baker Eddy, its Discoverer and Founder, enables us to understand fully just what our relationship to God is, and how to apply that understanding so that it does help us solve our every problem.

The Charleston Gazette.

DES MOINES, IOWA (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Charles F. Adams, who said in part:—

Man's ignorance concerning God has been the calamity of the ages, and the direct and most abundant fruitage of that ignorance has been and still is fear, the most destructive element in the whole fabric of humanity. Fear, in some one of its myriad forms, has been "father to the thought" that has precipitated every tragedy of human history. Surely John knew whereof he spoke when he said, "Fear hath torment," and anything that will annihilate or even abate fear should be hailed with gratitude and heralded with praise.

The question then arises, What will remove fear from the human consciousness? In reply, If ignorance concerning God causes fear, then a knowledge of God must be the remedy for destroying fear. Now how shall we acquire this knowledge? The Scriptures say in the words of John, "Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God." Again, "There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear."

The richest legacy ever left to humanity was left by our Savior, Jesus the Christ, in his perfect demonstration of God's love and protecting care for all mankind. He broke every supposed material law, he walked on the waves, made the lame to walk, gave speech to the dumb, sight to the blind, and raised the dead, and after reaching the summit of all his achievements, he said, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father."

The second richest gift to the world was made by our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy. In her book entitled "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," she has shown us how to realize our Savior's legacy, by clarifying the Bible, by showing us how to approach God with confidence, and how scientifically to appropriate His laws in the solving of our daily problems.

CHULA VISTA, CALIF. (Society).—Lecturer introduced by Mrs. Jessie G. Davies, who said in part:—

In Luke we are told that a certain ruler came to Christ Jesus, asking, "What shall I do to inherit eternal life?" and when he was told how he must follow the Master, the Bible records that he went away sorrowful, unwilling to make the surrender of self-will and self-interest for the good of humanity,—for we know that a demonstration is always a conquest of self. The real underlying motive in the desire for healing, although it may not be so acknowledged, is the desire for eternal life. Mrs. Eddy in the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," on page 289, says, "Truth demonstrated is eternal life." The Christ-method of learning life is made plain through Christian Science. The Master in the following words clearly defined eternal life, and Christian Science adequately interprets his words: "This is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."

ST. LOUIS, MO. (Sixth Church).—Lecturer introduced by Mrs. Jennie B. Bartlow, who said in part:—

There was never a time in the history of the world when the human heart yearned more earnestly and sincerely to know the fatherhood of God and brotherhood of man than at this hour of reconstruction. There was never a time when the need for spiritual guidance was so great.

Mrs. Eddy, our intrepid Leader, has given us Christian Science, the greatest thing in the world to-day, because it is the true knowledge of God, which enables us not only to know His fatherhood but also the spiritual idea of His motherhood, and that the brotherhood of man is established here and now. It is the divine voice of Truth calling to us and saying, If you will approach my standard, you will be delivered from the fetters of erroneous beliefs that have embittered your experience. Every good thing is yours; namely, health, happiness, peace, joy, prosperity, and protection—yea, the kingdom of heaven itself.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN. (Society, University of Minnesota).—Lecturer introduced by H. B. Roe, who said in part:—

In this era of world-wide unrest, social, economic, religious, when the question of the ages, "What is truth," is being repeated with ever increasing insistence, surely it is eminently fitting that we, in this college community, pause from time to time to listen in quiet earnestness to the message of Christian Science from the lips of one qualified to speak it. The essential of Christian Science is right thinking; and to whom shall right thinking appeal if not to you college men and women? To you it comes a message of courage and strength, of freedom from limitation.

The world seems filled with pleasure and pain, joy and sorrow, mixed in inextricable confusion, the pain, the sorrow, the fear all too often uppermost. This world calls you to leadership, and to service. Over the sea of pain, error, and doubt sounds the Christian Science gospel with its calm and healing assurance, like the "Peace, be still!" of the Master on the Sea of Galilee two thousand years ago. It is a message of leadership, confident, fearless leadership, and of service. It is the spirit of the Christ-cure which the world rejected for nearly nineteen centuries because it understood it not.

It was reserved for Mrs. Eddy, a noble woman of our own time, consecrating her life to the service of humanity, to uncover again to the world the healing truth and to demonstrate the process. With wisdom born of inspiration, she made many wise provisions for tired humanity's reassurance, guidance, and instruction that the precious truth of the Christ-healing might not again be lost to the world. One of these provisions is the Board of Lectureship of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, whose duty and privilege it is to carry this message to all the world, to give a clear understanding of its teachings, and to correct misconceptions regarding it.

ROCHESTER, N. Y. (Second Church).—Lecturer introduced by Mrs. Carrie Young, who said in part:—

Christian Science not only attracts the serious attention but commands the respect of hundreds upon hundreds of thinking, intelligent men and women, because it lightens the load of suffering, sorrow, and pain humanity has to carry.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF. (Fifth Church).—Lecturer introduced by Mrs. Antoinette W. Stephens, who said in part:—

Christian Science is simply primitive Christianity restated. It is the truth taught and practiced by Christ Jesus, which coexisted with God and will last through all eternity. That truth is with us to-day, and is healing sickness and sin, and is bringing joy and happiness and peace to thousands the world over.

OAK PARK, ILL. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Leslie F. McCullough, who said in part:—

Those who are uninstructed in Christian Science are prone to look upon it as a new religion or form of worship, but this is not the case. It is simply the application of the eternal laws of God, the laws which enabled Moses to lead the children of Israel through the Red Sea, Daniel to stop the mouths of the lions, Elijah to raise the widow's son, and Jesus to heal the sick and sinning.

These laws have always existed, and in the case of the early prophets and of Jesus and the apostles, were successfully demonstrated; but it remained for a woman, Mary Baker Eddy, to reduce these laws to a system which could be studied and applied, with sure results, to every problem of existence. As Mrs. Eddy says, in the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," on page 243, "The divine Love, which made harmless the poisonous viper, which delivered men from the boiling oil, from the fiery furnace, from the jaws of the lion, can heal the sick in every age and triumph over sin and death."

Testimonies of Healing

I wish to give my testimony to the healing power of Christian Science. It is now two and a half years since I first heard of it. My little daughter had been suffering from St. Vitus's dance for two years. At times she was well enough to attend school, but only for about two weeks; then she would be ill again for two months. A dear friend asked me to try Christian Science. I did so, and saw my child gradually getting better. She attended school soon after treatment had been taken up for her, and has been able to continue. It was not a quick healing, but as I began to see that disease was no part of God's child and that she could only manifest perfection, the sickness began to disappear. I have had many proofs of the ever presence of God, and hope to express some of the gratitude I feel in giving this testimony. Last spring a younger child fell ill with scarlet fever. I at once went to a practitioner for treatment, which was lovingly given; the fever was destroyed, sore throat was also overcome in a few hours, and on the sixth day the child was out playing. The work was so perfect that infection had no place; no fear of it was present, as we were trusting and dwelling in the law of divine Science. Sickness of any kind has no power when one realizes the omnipresence of God. I am grateful for all the blessings I have received through Christian Science, to the dear friend who first brought it to me, and for the loving help of the practitioner.

(Mrs.) Ida Gordon, London, England.

It is with a grateful heart that I can testify to the healing and regenerating power of Christian Science. I knew nothing of this wonderful truth until my return from Palestine last May, when I turned to it in gratitude for what it had done for my family during the latter part of my absence abroad. The services so impressed me that when a month later I was in the grip of ague and malaria I was able to turn my back on quinine and place myself in the loving hands of a practitioner. Not only was I cured but all fear of the return of the complaint was destroyed.

The question of supply, which at one time seemed acute, was also settled for me by divine Love. I am very grateful for this and other healings but am still more grateful for the spiritual uplift and destruction of false appetites. I used to rush through my meals to get to my pipe, and suffered very much when deprived of it for a time; but during treatment all desire for smoking left me, without any effort or desire on my part; and although I was by no means a moderate drinker I never think of it now. This is all very wonderful to me and makes me very happy. I am deeply grateful to Mrs. Eddy for her beautiful work, to the practitioner for her loving help and patience, and to those dear friends in Christian Science who have helped me in so many ways.

I am filled with such a deep sense of gratitude for the manifold blessings which have come into my life through Christian Science that I wish to give my testimony in return for the many helpful testimonies which come to us through the literature, for which I am deeply grateful.

From childhood I had been a sufferer from physical ailments, bowel trouble, neuralgia, and sick headaches, which were believed to be hereditary. Later came an operation, after which I was a constant sufferer and several years after was bedfast for more than two months with peritonitis. From this time for several years I was a semi-invalid, having every sort of medical aid, including osteopathy, electricity, and specialists. Receiving but little relief we tried a change of climate and living the simple life, even to living in the country, at which place I was again in bed for six weeks with peritonitis, and was told that no constitution could withstand a third attack. With this great fear held over me, and suffering with a severe pain in my side, I came back to this city for help, the physician declaring my only help would be another operation. At this time, at the request of my husband, I turned to a Christian Science practitioner for help and in three weeks I was healed of both the pain in my side and the dreadful fear. This was twelve years ago, and although I felt very grateful and began reading "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, it was only for a short time, for with returning strength came the desire to resume my voice and piano study and I felt I could not find time for the study of Christian Science.

The chronic ailments were still causing suffering, so thinking it a shorter route to health and happiness I began the study of so-called mental science, new psychology, and the like. After several years of this study, feeling the lack of spiritual food, I gave considerable thought to a statement made by my mother, "Some day you will have to come back to God," and I realized the best and most uplifting things of my life had come through my mother's religious training. Then came a greater desire than I had ever known before to know what Christian Science is, what it was that had healed me five years before. I went to church, my first service, and now for the past five years I have been an earnest student of Christian Science, and I wish it were possible to put into words the many blessings it has brought into my life, lifting me out of the bondage of material sense into the freedom, the joys, of spiritual sense. It has been my only help in time of physical or mental discord, and I can say that God has been with me always and in all ways. The testing times have always proved most valuable times, for the light is always present to dispel the darkness and with it comes a truer realization of "God with us" to lift us into the consciousness of love and harmony.

How deeply grateful I am to God and to our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, whose loving gift to mankind, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," has opened to us the Bible as a chart for to-day's living, a guide to right thinking, leading us into that liberty which belongs to the children of God.—(Mrs.) Edith Clapper, Minneapolis, Minn.

So much help has been received from reading the testimonies of healing that I am very glad to tell of some of the blessings my family and I have received through the study and practice of Christian Science. Since this wonderful Christ-healing was brought to our home, we have had so many proofs of God's ever presence to heal, to guard, to guide, and to provide for our every need, that it would be a task even to mention half of the blessings. My first healing came after years of semi-invalidism during which I was almost always under the care of a doctor. Finally there came a complete breakdown, and an operation was advised. This, with the kindest and best care at the hospital, gave only temporary relief. When the whole family seemed in the depths of despair, dear friends sent Christian Science literature, after asking if I would read it. Gaining a little glimpse of the truth, but still afraid that there might be something wrong or displeasing to God in the teachings, I was moved to say aloud, "Dear God, I must know the truth," and the answer came through instantaneous healing. I arose and dressed, and the next day began to take up my tasks in the home, gaining in strength all the time.

Four children have taken up the study of Christian Science, and for five years we have had the happiness of helping each other solve the problems that come daily to us all. It is such a blessed privilege to be a channel for good. I am trying to prove my thankfulness to God by the faithful study and application of Christian Science teaching. I am also very grateful to our Leader for her life of labor and sacrifice that makes possible so much happiness for all who will accept it.—(Mrs.) LIZZIE G. WALRATH, Arlington, Iowa.

Some four years ago I reached a condition of almost complete helplessness resulting from a claim of rheumatism which had held me in bondage for some ten months, during which I had tried every remedy known to materia medica and found no relief, but instead was getting worse all the time. It was then that Christian Science was recommended to me. I at first refused it on account of my connection with a denominational church which had been dear to me for forty years and which I felt I could not allow anything to interfere with. After some persuasion on the part of friends who advised me to try it, as I had nothing to lose and possibly everything to gain, I consented to give it a trial. A practitioner was sent for. She called at three different times during a period of some ten days and continued treatment for about three weeks, at which time I was able to resume my regular work, and from that time to the present I have been entirely free from sickness of any kind. Neither have I taken any medicine of any kind. In addition to being healed of rheumatism I have also been healed of two ailments that I had been troubled with for years and which had become chronic. These claims were indigestion and constipation and I was compelled to take medicine every day or I would suffer. I had to be very careful also as to what I ate. This condition has all been changed, and I am now free from all these troubles, and can eat anything that is fit to eat.

These are the benefits I have received in a physical way, which are as nothing when compared with the spiritual uplift that I have received through the understanding of God that Christian Science has given me. The ability to realize the allness of God as Life, Truth, and Love, has kept me free from trouble of any kind. This was especially helpful to me during the war with Germany, when I had two sons over there and at the front, but I knew that God fills all space and was as much present on the field of battle as He is anywhere and His protecting arm could keep them safely, and it did. Both of them returned after their hard experience in as perfect condition as they were when they entered the service. This thought was very comforting to me and eliminated all fear.

To say that I am very grateful to God and to our dear Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, who by her untiring efforts and love made these things possible, is speaking very mildly. I cannot find language sufficient to express my gratitude.

Christian Science means so much to me and I have received so much help from it that I should like to add my testimony of some of the benefits I have received. I have been healed of colds, which I used to have frequently, headache, burns, and bruises. I also had trouble with aching feet, which has been entirely overcome, and now I never feel tired, whereas I used to feel completely worn out after doing what I thought was hard work. On one occasion I caught my foot on a wire and was thrown to the ground, striking heavily on one knee. Instantly the thought came to me, "What are you going to do about it?" for it seemed that I would not be able to walk. The answer came just as quickly, "Why nothing more than to think rightly, for nothing more needs to be done." The healing came as quickly as the fall and there was no pain, stiffness, or discoloration; I had realized the truth clearly. I am very grateful for these healings and many more that I might relate, but the greatest healing is the spiritual awakening which is taking place and which will continue until the material sense of existence entirely disappears. It is a great comfort to learn that matter is only a false mental concept and not a reality, and to be able to prove it by demonstration.

I am certainly very grateful for all the Christian Science literature and look forward to each new number, and I am especially grateful for the Monitor, as we can get all the world news from the standpoint of Principle and can believe what we read in its pages. I have found so much good from reading the testimonies of others that I hope some one will receive some benefit from mine. I am indeed grateful that I have found Christian Science, for I know that it will solve every problem that the future holds, just as it has solved every problem in the past.

It has been nine years since my testimony appeared in the Sentinel telling of my healing of indigestion. This disease had grown into a chronic condition and I was unable to take nourishment of any kind without an after effect that was almost unbearable. I soon became a physical wreck and was going about my work in a condition of great physical and mental anguish. Material remedies offered no relief and it was certainly a dark and gloomy outlook trying to live and work in that condition. I was advised by friends at various times to try Christian Science for my troubles, but their kind efforts were met with the usual ridicule used by those who are ignorant of the subject and have eyes to see but see not; but after all material efforts had been exhausted and I began to face a condition where it would soon be impossible for me to work, I took the matter up more seriously and decided to try it.

Needless to say, I was set absolutely free by the first treatment, and released from a condition of hell that no one can understand except those who have experienced it. From that time to the present writing I have been able to eat anything I wished, at any time I wanted it. This healing took place more than twelve years ago and since that time no material remedies have entered our home; all our ills have been overcome and destroyed by our faith in the divine Mind. At this time we took up the study in earnest in our home, and the Bible with the Christian Science textbook and the authorized literature have been our daily sustenance. As I progressed with this study I saw that Christian Science was a preventive as well as a curative, and we have proved this without a doubt, for we have enjoyed a greater degree of health and have had fewer attacks of the many ills that mortals are subject to when living in the belief of the necessity for sickness and disease. This has given me a better understanding of what Paul meant when he preached to the Romans the transformation of the body by the renewing of the mind, and I began to realize that it was imperative with me to unlearn all my misconceptions of God and His creation and to empty myself of all erroneous beliefs, appetites, and habits. The first error that yielded to this new light was the use of tobacco, a habit of thirty-five years' standing; this was destroyed at once without any use whatever of will power on my part. The erroneous beliefs about God gave way, one by one, to a higher and better understanding of Him, and with this understanding I am being healed daily of conditions of thought such as anger, hatred, malice, and revenge, and the seeming vacuum is being filled with more love and consideration for those with whom I come in contact.

Before coming into Science, I was rejected by three insurance companies as I was found in each case to have valvular heart trouble and was not considered a good risk, as the condition, they stated, would get worse as I grew older; but, as stated before, this religion of right thinking being a preventive as well as a curative, the belief of valvular heart trouble was soon reduced to its native nothingness. My gratitude cannot be expressed in words for what I know of Christian Science. We are told on page three of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," that "gratitude is much more than a verbal expression of thanks. Action expresses more gratitude than speech." It is my desire to show to my fellow workmen that Christian Science is not a Sunday religion only, but the Science of being, to be lived and demonstrated day by day.

It is with a feeling of gratitude that I give my testimony of the healing power of Christian Science. Several years ago, in the month of September, it was necessary for me to go to the woods to collect material to be used in the teaching of art. While driving along the bank of a creek, a vine which hung from a tree brushed the side of my face. I was so intent on getting a great variety of material that I took no further thought of the vine. During the evening I noticed a burning sensation on my face and neck, but as it was so slight I paid but little attention to it. The next morning there was some color and a little swelling on that side of my face. This being Friday and the day for my art lesson I was too busy to think of my condition. The burning sensation grew to a stinging pain and the swelling gradually increased. All day Saturday my condition grew worse and when I arose on Sunday morning I realized that I must ask for help. A friend of mine, a practitioner, lived just across the street, so I asked her to help me; she did so and I returned home and tried to realize the truth, but was so mesmerized by error that I could not resist the thought of fear. My friend called later and remained with me about a quarter of an hour and then went to church. About noon I was so much improved that I was able to see to read in Science and Health. I continued to improve so rapidly that I was able to return to school the next morning. This healing seemed all the more wonderful to me as I had been poisoned a number of years before and I was treated in materia medica for almost a year before I was in a normal condition.

I should also like to tell of a healing I experienced in a case of the grippe. As a child I was scarcely ever permitted to play out of doors during the winter, for if I did I was sure to have croup. After I was grown, whenever I had the grippe it always settled in my throat or on my lungs. This condition became so serious that our family physician said I had tubercles forming on my left lung. Fear seemed to get the better of me when the season for grippe came. During the winter of 1906 I was out of school for over a month and did not recover entirely from the effects of this disease until the next summer. Several years after this I was taken with a severe attack, and the practitioner was called immediately. She called twice on Wednesday and Thursday, on Friday I was able to sit up, and in a week from the following Monday I was back in school.

For all these healings and for the spiritual uplift, I am thankful to God and deeply grateful to Mrs. Eddy, and to the loving Christian Scientists who have helped me gain a better understanding of this saving truth.

Deep gratitude for Christian Science impels me to send this testimony. After suffering from kidney trouble for months and having just given up medical treatment and suffered a severe relapse, I commenced this study. Through reading the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, I was completely healed in a few days. During the ensuing five years I had no medical treatment, but many quick, often instantaneous physical healings were effected through the application of the truth as taught in Christian Science.

I wish to testify to one healing which to human sense was slow but which brought me great spiritual blessing through the knowledge of God's omnipotence. After severe mental disturbances over three years ago, mental depression followed, combined with heart trouble, and thoughts of fear that the senses might become deranged became manifest. I was given loving and patient help in Christian Science, and even in the darkest hours was upheld by faith that the truth which Jesus demonstrated and which Christian Science had taught me to understand, would also free me from all fear. The mental depression vanished gradually, and at first came moments, then hours and days, in which I found rest in the sure knowledge that evil is not power. How grateful I was for these first moments after the terrible storm which had raged in my thoughts for weeks. It took longer before I found complete mental peace in my business activities, but thanks to the assistance which I often received through a practitioner, it was unnecessary for me to give up my work at all. This alone seemed a wonder to me, for although appearing calm outwardly, during some strenuous activity a feverish fear possessed me; this often became manifest when only seeing others actively engaged in work. How grateful I am for the liberation from this fear.

This experience has proved to me that every mist, no matter how real or dense it may appear, must give way to the omnipotence of Truth. We have only to wait patiently on God. I have fully recovered my former cheerfulness and am thankful to God for every experience which compels me to come nearer to Him, for then we realize the truth of the Bible words, "And ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart."

(Miss) Margarete Freyer, Berlin, Germany.

It was not a physical need that brought me into Christian Science, but an honest desire to know the truth. For many years I had been a "free thinker," though ever anxious to become a member of, or associate myself with, some church whose teachings I could really understand. I always felt that God is Love, and could never picture to myself a revengeful or hateful God, any more than I could a father who is hateful to his children.

About three years ago I went to a Christian Science lecture and was so impressed with the message given that the following Sunday I visited the Christian Science church in our town. The beautiful simplicity of the service so impressed me that soon I became a regular attendant, and now have the privilege of being a member of this church as well as of The Mother Church. Since coming into Science we have had many proofs of God's allness and ever present help. My wife, who had been a sufferer for many years from varicose veins, has been healed through this wonderful truth.

I myself had been a strong smoker for over thirty years, had worn glasses for thirteen years, but have been completely healed of both false beliefs through the teachings of Christian Science. I was also healed of the belief of rupture, which I had had for forty years, and to-day am depending on God only for my strength, instead of on a truss. Christian Science has also helped me greatly in my business, and many knotty problems have been solved through the application of the truth.

While overseas our son was protected by divine Love, and came home without a scratch, having been in eight or nine battles. We all are deeply grateful for the beautiful revelation of Christian Science, and to our beloved Leader, and are all striving to make ourselves worthy of the many blessings God has bestowed and is bestowing on us daily.

MAURITS M. GODSCHALK, Far Rockaway, N. Y.

When first Christian Science was presented to me I was not ready to accept it; but after four years of "trials and tribulations" I found that, in the words of Mrs. Eddy, "the sharp experiences of belief in the supposititious life of matter, as well as our disappointments and ceaseless woes, turn us like tired children to the arms of divine Love. Then we begin to learn Life in divine Science" (Science and Health, p. 322). Our three-year-old daughter illustrated clearly to me the outcome of attempting to serve two masters. She was cutting out a picture having a lady on either side. Wishing to keep both ladies she would first cut one side awhile, then the other, with the result that both were spoiled. For nearly two years have I striven to serve God, good, and as I look back over the long list of human woes that have disappeared into their native nothingness there remains not the slightest doubt to me that Christian Science is the promised "Comforter." Every day I truly strive to learn and demonstrate more of this truth, for I know, as Mrs. Eddy says in "Unity of Good" (p. 49)," So long as I hold evil in consciousness, I cannot be wholly good."

On page 54 of the same book our Leader also says, "To be healed, one must lose sight of a false claim." Among the false claims of mortal mind that have been destroyed for my husband, baby, and myself, through the aid of a Christian Science practitioner, are constipation, tonsillitis, neuralgia, rupture, colds, a habit from childhood, and influenza. We made a beautiful demonstration over my husband's former occupation, with much good to all concerned. I am most grateful for the opportunity of testifying, through the literature, to our spiritual, moral, and physical healing; also for having been able to help others to prove the power of Truth. As I grow day by day my reverence for Mrs. Eddy also grows. Her writings, the Bible, and the literature published by The Christian Science Publishing Society are the sunshine of my life.

It is with the deepest sense of gratitude that I take advantage of the privilege, given to all, to give my testimony through the periodicals, knowing it will help some one as others have helped me. Christian Science was brought to my attention by a member of my family. A short time afterwards I was invited to attend a Wednesday evening meeting, which I did, and since then I have never ceased attending. I shall never forget the peace and harmony that filled my consciousness. I immediately borrowed the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, from our reading room.

Six months before this I had been condemned to wear glasses by one of the best specialists in my home town. I was not to read even with them on and could only do so for a short time without suffering. You can know how happy I was when reading one evening to find myself instantaneously healed of this eye trouble. I have also been healed of chronic sick headaches, liver trouble, tonsillitis, and many other ailments. When a great sorrow seemed to come to me and it seemed to be my duty to take a position, within one week two were offered me, even more than I could accept, which is always the way when we look absolutely to Principle for supply. I am grateful to say that I am learning to be more thoughtful of others. My little son has had many healings,—of mumps, influenza, measles, and other diseases. It has helped him in his school work a great deal.

Although I am grateful for all these blessings, I cannot stop without expressing my gratitude to God and to our Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, for all the activities of the Christian Science cause, especially the periodicals, of which Mrs. Eddy states in "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany" (p. 353), "I have given the name to all the Christian Science periodicals. The first was The Christian Science Journal, designed to put on record the divine Science of Truth; the second I entitled Sentinel, intended to hold guard over Truth, Life, and Love; the third, Der Herold der Christian Science, to proclaim the universal activity and availability of Truth; the next I named Monitor, to spread undivided the Science that operates unspent. The object of the Monitor is to injure no man, but to bless all mankind."

I wish to express my gratitude to God for His healing power. In my experience "man's extremity was God's opportunity." I was told by many physicians that my case was incurable but that I might be benefited by an operation; but the great Physician was presented to me through Christian Science, and I can truthfully say that God has met my every need. Internal troubles from which I suffered all my life have been healed; also bowel trouble, hemorrhoids, and a catarrhal condition of the intestines. Bronchitis and many other ills have been overcome, and to-day I am a strong, healthy woman and can work from morning until night without being tired, while before coming into Christian Science I could not do my housework or be on my feet very long at a time. Life was a burden to me; also I had what the doctors said was inflammation of the bladder, of which I have been completely healed.

I am grateful for the healings of many errors of disposition and my one desire is that this uprooting of error may continue until I have that Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus." Since taking up Christian Science I have had to meet and master error in many ways, but God has been with me and I have had many proofs of His love, and I am grateful for these demonstrations. I am grateful to God and to Mrs. Eddy, also to the practitioner who helped me over many rough places. That my life may be a blessing and an example to all with whom I associate, that this testimony may be of help to some one, and that I may be worthy of the name Christian Scientist is my desire.

Signs of the Times

[Fresno (Calif.) Republican]

If democracy is to be government by discussion, then the first condition of that discussion must be its intellectual honesty. In fact, the most menacing present danger to democracy is the prevalent lack of this quality. Only the truth can make a people free. If the people are denied access to the facts, or, still worse, are presented as facts things which are not facts, they are not really governing themselves, no matter how completely the mechanics of government may be in their hands. Literally the people would be better off if governed by a minority which knows the facts than by a majority which does not know them, or knows them wrong. Government by the people is a desirable thing but not a necessary thing. Government by the facts is the only unescapable thing, for the facts are going to rule us anyway, with or without the people. Many nations have lacked democracy but none ever escaped the facts or their consequences. The only way to get true democracy is to bring the facts and the people together.

That, unfortunately, is what we are not getting, and, apparently, what we are not going to get until public scorn puts intellectual dishonesty in the same class with moral dishonesty. In certain circles this is already the case. An intellectually dishonest man would be as little tolerated in the faculty club of a university as a moral crook. In science and in scholarship, the standard is fixed. Notoriously it is not yet so in government and politics. The lack of it is even more dangerous to democracy than stealing or bribery.

[The Congregationalist and Advance]

It is as important for the church to try to moralize modern business as it is for it to enter into a campaign of evangelism or a drive for money. The church cannot pass upon and adjust every detail of a complicated business, but it can and should strive by every legitimate means to help establish industrial justice in the world. The Golden Rule is not a pretty maxim to learn as a boy in Sunday school and then forget when one becomes a business man. It is the only sure and sufficient principle on which buying and selling can rest.

[Rev. Oscar L. Joseph in Zion's Herald]

We need a vision of God more than a view of God. Jesus had nothing to say about the Being of God but a great deal about the character of God. He proclaimed the practice of God and not a philosophy of God.

[Rev. Albert Thomas Steele in The Biblical World]

From the historical account of his life, Jesus grew, developing in body and mind, and we can believe also in spirituality, as others do. He shared the current opinions and traditions of his time, and hence though possibly to a less degree than others, the limitations; for he was human in the truest sense or not at all. In fact his divinity has its most practical evidence and clearest manifestation in his perfect humanity. The life of Jesus among men is that of a normally unfolding experience, in the highest sense human. The Messianic consciousness was not out of causal relation, but rather culminated from or in his character as a result of the life he lived. We can believe this Messianic consciousness had its beginning at his baptism and was deepened by the wilderness experience. But his conception of the Messiahship, as gathered from the temptation story, is a lofty conception worthy of the spirituality and wisdom of the Son of God. It is from this point of view of a normal life, naturally related to its environment, that we wish to differentiate as far as possible the attitude of Jesus toward his miracles. For we believe that seeing his miracles as he saw them—looking at them through his eyes—is not only the most rational way, but it is also of the highest critical and practical value.

Letters of Appreciation

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. Extracts from such letters follow:

AS a teacher, I am much interested in a particular phase of work upon which information is not plentiful. At one time, on a hunt for data and fact, I visited the library of a State Normal School. On my way out, with the meager information that I had obtained, I stopped at a bulletin board and saw there a clipping which gave me exactly what I wanted. After reading it gratefully, I was about to pass on when I noticed that the clipping was from THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR. Then I glanced over the board, and found that every one of the several clippings on various phases of educational work was from the MONITOR. My subscription will follow.

I FEEL a few words of appreciation are due from me for THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR. I have been a subscriber for over twelve months. I take this daily newspaper and read items interesting to me. When I commenced reading, I used to read only the Home Forum page. In a short time I commenced to read the editorial page; then articles concerning the labor problem; and now I am interested in the whole paper, which is teaching me to think from a world-wide viewpoint. A mate at work remarked one day that he enjoyed glancing over my MONITOR as it often contained articles about countries through which he has traveled.

"What I say unto you I say unto all, WATCH." Jesus

VOLUME XXII JULY 31, 1920 NUMBER 48

Fulfillment

FRANK BARNDOLLAR

NEVER has there been any doubt as to man having a specific duty to perform upon all occasions and under every manifested condition; just what that duty was or how it was to be performed has, however, very often seemed a conundrum. Perhaps the greatest stumblingblock in the way of earnest seekers after the correct solution of a problem and how to obtain this solution, has been that very mortal inclination to believe that one's self is most responsible for the solution. Our Master stated definitely the specific duty and purpose of man on more than one occasion. In the gospel of John, we read of Jesus being persecuted by the Jews at the pool Bethesda. He had healed an impotent man on the Sabbath day and in answer to their condemnation asserted, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." The Jews being the more angered and seeking to kill him, brought forth further explanation from our great Way-shower, who continued, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do." "For as the Father hath life in himself; so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself; and hath given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of man." Herein did Jesus state most clearly the rule and Principle of Christian Science,—the absolute statement that God is the only power capable of being demonstrated by man, and that through this reflection of infinite goodness and strength man is performing the only duty he is capable of performing. Accompanying this absolute statement goes also the denial of all self-assertiveness,—"The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do,"—thus silencing the mortal inclination to believe in the possession of any power apart from God.

Mrs. Eddy, on page 475 of Science and Health, exposes this lie of mortality and clearly states the relationship between God and man. "Man is idea," she says, "the image, of Love; he is not physique. He is the compound idea of God, including all right ideas; the generic term for all that reflects God's image and likeness; the conscious identity of being as found in Science, in which man is the reflection of God, or Mind, and therefore is eternal; that which has no separate mind from God; that which has not a single quality underived from Deity; that which possesses no life, intelligence, nor creative power of his own, but reflects spiritually all that belongs to his Maker." As we realize from whence come our strength and power, and appreciate the value of this possession, brighter and happier becomes our sense of living. The fear of the loss of power or the lessening of authority is obliterated, and the determination to perform the duty of demonstration makes itself evident. Mortal ambitions and vanities are overshadowed by the joy of self-abnegation and the happiness of harmony and love for all mankind. The joy of fulfillment is predominant; gladness prevails that God's strength and power and love are ever present and omnipotent.

Thus also do we become conscious of the full significance of Jesus' admonition when one of his disciples would have turned back to bury his father. When the disciple would have followed the custom and means of adjusting matters in those days, he was admonished by his Master, "Follow me; and let the dead bury their dead." Let mortality, this dream of existence apart from spirituality, bury itself; leave nothingness to be taken care of by nothingness, and let those who have an understanding of spirituality hasten on in the demonstration of life eternal. Our duty of to-day, like theirs of yesterday, is to hasten heavenward and not turn aside to listen to the suggestions of mortality.

Christian Science reveals to all earnest seekers these important facts. It gives one an understanding of his specific duty and a knowledge of the power wherewith to accomplish this duty. It reveals the snares and pitfalls of those false manifestations of mortal mind which are ever set to insnare the seeker of Truth and entice him from the straight and narrow way. Thoughts of fear of loss, or a sense of destruction diminish, and thoughts of courage and construction forge to the front. The earnest desire to build, to prove one's stronghold or consciousness impregnable to aught but joy and happiness becomes the dominant desire, and man's duty as the infinite reflection of God is realized to be that of demonstration or fulfillment. We read in Revelation, "For God hath put in their hearts to fulfil his will, and to agree, and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled."

True Speaking

FOLLETTE BROTHERTON

PAUL in his first epistle to the Corinthians says, "When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child: but when I became a man, I put away childish things." The student of Christian Science could say: When I believed I was a child of matter I spoke a material language, I understood the material to be true, I thought in doubt and in fear. I spoke, I understood the material because I knew not the truth; but when I became a student of Christian Science I learned that matter is not real, I understood the spiritual to be true, and I learned to think in confidence and in Truth because I know that matter is unreal and that the spiritual is real.

When one's thought has been awakened, ever so little, by Truth, to the realization that there is only the real and eternal and that what has through ignorance been believed to be real is only a belief, and a false one, it becomes necessary to speak the truth that one is learning, to see and to know that material speaking, material believing, material thinking are really nothing, and then to cast them out, and to speak, understand, and think the only language that is,—the language of Spirit; to put off the old and take on the new; to put away the material and rejoice in the spiritual.

It seems to be more universal to claim to think and to understand the truth than to speak it; and the writer of the Proverbs says of a mortal, "As he thinketh in his heart, so is he." Surely that which is not thought is not spoken, and that which is really understood speaks of itself. It is futile to claim to think the truth unless the truth is spoken. It can be observed that with some much more time is spent, generally speaking, in talking about mortal mind beliefs and claims, in talking about "thinking the truth," than in speaking that which is true.

Webster defines speak, "To declare orally; to tell or express in words; to utter; as to speak the truth; to speak sense." It is nonsense to go on talking about beliefs and claims when even a degree of the real is learned. Students of Christian Science are given unlimited opportunity to learn the real and eternal and to speak it, not merely of it. It is necessary to continue in the word of Truth to demonstrate harmony. To talk of beliefs and claims part of the time and of Truth the rest of the time will not bring the realization of peace and harmony. The glory, the honor, and the dominion are God's and the word is His. To abide steadfastly in Truth is a goal to work for. Paul said, "Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye stedfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord."

How much time is wasted in discoursing on what mortal mind claims. Mortal mind claims should not seem to fascinate, for they should be withered just as effectually as Jesus withered the fig tree because it pretended that which it was not. Mortal mind is only pretense. Students of Christian Science should "let the dead bury their dead," should let mortal mind claims be mere claims of unreality which have nothing of interest. Claims of mortal mind should be so stripped of their glamour that the student is ready to silence their pretense in the same effectual way that Jesus did when he said, "Get thee hence, Satan."

Mrs. Eddy says in Science and Health (p. 354), "The night of materiality is far spent, and with the dawn Truth will waken men spiritually to hear and to speak the new tongue." This new tongue is the language of Spirit, the language of reality, not the language of beliefs. The need is to speak the truth that frees mankind from the belief of the bondage of sin and death,—from the very belief that there are mortal mind beliefs. The lack of the knowledge of Truth, the continual and needless talking of beliefs and claims, is "the night of materiality." When the truth is learned, if it is not spoken it becomes the unused talent, and the only way to keep the talent is to use it and multiply it. Talking about mortal mind beliefs is not really speaking, it is only the supposititious opposite of the truth of speaking, the absence of the truth as darkness is the absence of light. Christian Science gives the light that enables one to loosen the bandages of false beliefs, and furnishes the opportunity to discern the real, to put away the unreal, and to speak the language of Truth.

Since there is only God and His manifestation, it is easy to learn and to speak the truth. Let Truth speak in its infinity and reveal the action of divine Mind. Thus the immortal harmony that is now and that will be forever can ring out in the words we speak. The teachings of Jesus and of Mrs. Eddy are to speak to disease "as one having authority" over it. To speak the truth with authority is to speak the truth in every position and under every circumstance. In Paul's epistle to Titus he says, "But speak thou the things which become sound doctrine," and surely that is good counsel to-day.

Working Out Our Salvation

MILDRED E. BEANS

ON page 39 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, we read, "'Now,' cried the apostle, 'is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation,'—meaning, not that now men must prepare for a future-world salvation, or safety, but that now is the time in which to experience that salvation in spirit and in life." What more glorious realization can come to any of us, than that right here and now we can not only begin to work out our salvation, which is to last through all eternity, but also enjoy as we go along the benefits of our labor? The working out of this salvation means, of course, spiritual progress, and every right step taken in the path of spiritual progress is secure, for we cannot go back to a material way of thinking about anything when the spiritual fact is once understood. It would be like clinging to the statement that twice two is five after it has been proved that twice two is four. The very fact that we desire this progress is a proof that God, intelligence, is working with us, and this being true, what is there to prevent our success? Nothing can hinder the advancing unfoldment of intelligence, for it is the only real power; it renders null and void the so-called forces of evil, ignorance, and is ever waiting with loving-kindness to direct our steps. What we need, then, is to avail ourselves now of this intelligence, which is God, and to prove now man's relationship with the Father. Jesus pointed out the way, and we have but to follow his direction.

If, in order to reach the salvation which we are so desirous of obtaining, we needed to overcome and surmount difficulties the existence of which were a reality instead of being a mere dream, a false belief of life in matter, we should indeed have cause to fear; but when it is understood that the real man, who is made in the image of God, is perfect, it becomes evident that salvation is but the awakening from a dream which pictures man as God's unlikeness. This dream has no more reality or truth than have night dreams and is no more to be feared.

The sooner we begin this process of awakening, the better it will be for us, and it is not an individual problem only, because every time a claim of error is broken, it becomes just that much easier for some one else to overcome that claim. In working out our own salvation, then, we are helping along the salvation of the world. A nobler occupation we could not have, and we must rejoice every step of the way, never yielding for a moment to discouragement, for Mrs. Eddy tells us on page 254 of Science and Health, "Pilgrim on earth, thy home is heaven; stranger, thou art the guest of God."

The Ever Presence of God

ADELL FOY

TO students of Christian Science, God's presence is becoming the truest, most real fact in life, bringing joy and peace, eliminating fear, sickness, and sin. Our whole concept of our heavenly Father is very different from the one formerly held by most of us, that He was a mysterious, far-away Being who sometimes intervened in human affairs and was remembered chiefly, it seemed, in sorrow or sickness, but was very slightly concerned in our everyday affairs. We took it for granted that we must go on with a sort of blind faith; that we were not supposed to know much about God; and as for man in His image and likeness—that surely was in the next world, not here. The mistake was in thinking that mortal man was the divine image and likeness; consequently that God was a magnified and glorified human being "in heaven." And where was heaven? It could not be here where sorrow and trouble are so evident. Yet the Bible, when studied in connection with "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," shows clearly that heaven is here and now to those who understand. In the Lord's Prayer the first line is, "Our Father which art in heaven," so evidently heaven is where God is. We admit that God is infinite; therefore, heaven must be ever present, the manifestation of God's presence. That He cannot be in any defined place or locality, now here and now there, is self-evident. Christ Jesus said, "The kingdom of God is within you," and we used to wonder where; for physicians and surgeons say that in all their study of the human body they have never found the "seat of the soul," that which to them stands for the supposed spiritual part of mankind. Where could the kingdom be but in spiritual understanding? What a man knows about God and man determines his life.

In the study of our daily Lesson-Sermons as outlined in The Christian Science Quarterly, the Bible is in constant use and is understood instead of being merely believed, and with great satisfaction we find it to be logical and consistent. We read in the first chapter of Genesis that God made everything and that it was very good; and in the first chapter of John's gospel we read, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. . . . and without him was not any thing made that was made." It is plain from this that God made all, and only good. Then what about that which is not good? It is only the seeming absence of good, and to understand this we must translate everything into mental terms. On page 269 of our textbook Mrs. Eddy says, "Metaphysics resolves things into thoughts, and exchanges the objects of sense for the ideas of Soul." Great thinkers, from Plato to the present time, have argued that matter is not substantial, but not until Mrs. Eddy's revelation have we known what true substance is and learned that a man's whole existence is indeed "as he thinketh."

We all believe education is good and desirable, and we know that it is purely mental. We see the necessity for education in mathematics, physics, astronomy, law, and other branches. Why should there not be education in religion? After the Sunday school how few, comparatively, really have studied the Bible or really have known what their church creeds and doctrines mean. Jesus said that God is Spirit and that He must be worshiped "in spirit and in truth." These two words linked together show us that truth is spiritual. As our Leader shows us, we must be educated spiritually, and this is what Science and Health does. True religion is the most important study there is; we find it is really the whole of living, as it helps and guides us in every study, work, and experience, great and small. By it we find God ever present; we seek and find good; fear and evil are seen to be the negation, nothingness, which they really are, and we realize in greater measure that good is manifested in infinite variety. God's creation, as right idea, is unfolded and revealed in the "beauty of holiness"—wholeness; for it is plain that idea expresses the Mind which conceives it. Hence God is Mind, as Mrs. Eddy uses that word.

True religion states the oneness of Father and Son, the Christ, which every one possesses and manifests in greater or less degree. At present we do not know all of God; but spiritual education, reason, and revelation are unfolding more and more every hour, through the Christ, the truth about God, that pure spiritual thinking which Paul calls the "mind . . . which was also in Christ Jesus." Mind is constantly expressing itself; it must in order to be Mind. So we learn to know God and His expression, which shine through all experience. Every good and beautiful truth comes from our Father-Mother God, who made all. So does every healing in Christian Science practice, and such healings prove Immanuel, God with us, every moment. They prove the Bible to be true and applicable to our present, everyday living, instead of being merely a narrative of things that happened ages ago. We live over again the experiences of men and women told of there and learn from their mistakes as well as profit by their rightness. All are making the journey from Egypt to Canaan, from the darkness of idolatry in some form to the light of the First Commandment, which tells us there is one power, one presence. Many have found themselves amid conditions so serious that they felt as if they were in a den of lions, and not all have known how to trust in God's presence for deliverance, as Daniel did. Many a parent, after giving repeated proofs of loving care and guidance, has had his children again disobey and rebel, as did the children of Israel, according to the record in Exodus; while others have lived over again the goodness of Joseph in returning good for evil, in providing food for his father and the brothers who sold him. Then there is the incident of the prodigal son, so beautifully interpreted in Christian Science, as showing the ever present Father, Principle, Mind, known and seen only as we return to spiritual thinking. Obscured by thoughts that are ungodlike, shut out from home—true consciousness—by our disobedience, we fail to experience the harmony of heaven, which really is present always. We know that many who have stood for the true idea of right have been slandered and persecuted, mentally crucified; but the truth that makes free is for all and will raise them above all material conditions. So it is for each one to take this chart of life, the Bible, and read it as vitally true to-day.

As we study Science and Health we find it shows us how to solve problems physical, mental, financial, social, and political, and by proofs, demonstration, we see its necessity and that Christian Science is practical. Without really studying the question, we are so apt to think that all see material objects alike; but different likes and dislikes, various tastes in color, form, size, show us that the same object is many things to many people. One may seem to think along a very narrow line; as Wordsworth puts it:—

> A primrose by a river's brim
> A yellow primrose was to him,
> And it was nothing more.

Regarding all nature as purely material and man as flesh and bones, his views must be limited to matter and material force. Another may be seeing that the suppositional mortal mind controls matter, which is a step higher; but natural sciences, so called, are only the human mind in operation. Through the study of divine metaphysics as found in our textbook, Jesus' command to "heal the sick" is fulfilled by the healing of all manner of disease. These sentences found on page 140 of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," are helpful and illuminating: "Not materially but spiritually we know Him as divine Mind, as Life, Truth, and Love. We shall obey and adore in proportion as we apprehend the divine nature and love Him understandingly, warring no more over the corporeality, but rejoicing in the affluence of our God." So we find joy and health, not in any thought of time, place, or form, which imply limitation, but in the infinitude of Spirit, God, and His eternal reflection.

Prayer

CLARA C. SHOWERS

WE are told in the ninth chapter of Luke that Jesus took with him Peter, John, and James and went up into a mountain to pray. To-day the need of all men is more devout prayer. It must be a prayer in which we sever ourselves from all belief in an erroneous past; also a prayer that builds not on a salvation for the future, but is a realizing sense of the presence of God right here and now. As we read further in the chapter we find that as Jesus prayed "the fashion of his countenance was altered, and his raiment was white and glistering." Does our prayer to-day bring to us a change of countenance, or do we satisfy thought by a repetition of words? Prayer without results is like clouds that leave no moisture to propagate anew the parched vegetation.

On page 9 of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," we read, "Do we pursue the old selfishness, satisfied with having prayed for something better, though we give no evidence of the sincerity of our requests by living consistently with our prayer?" We cannot obtain an answer to our prayer beyond our willingness to conform to it in our daily activities. As desire is prayer, it is well to ask ourselves a few questions and find what is really uppermost in our thinking. The Bible is full of precious promises, and our Leader's writings all serve to show us how to obtain them. If we have taken every step toward the answer to our prayer, more light will be given. Nothing but righteous prayer, lived and practiced, can bring a sense of harmony, and if we desire peace and joy, the door of our understanding must be kept open to receive the answer to our prayers. In the words of one of our hymns (Hymnal, p. 88):—

Prayer is the Christian's vital breath,
The Christian's native air:
His watchword overcometh death—
He enters heaven with prayer.

Government

DAVENPORT BROMFIELD

IN what regard does government by Christian Science differ from the human sense of government? The human sense of government was described by Abraham Lincoln as "by the people, of the people, and for the people." The human sense of democracy is a government in which the people by their free expression elect their governors. These governors are supposed to hold an honorable and exalted position by virtue of being the people's choice, and in many cases are apt to exert a powerful influence over the people and their affairs. Often, out of this system grows a belief that "to the victors belong the spoils," and much so-called influence and political spoil is manifested, to the detriment of the people's interest.

Christian Science, while upholding honest and representative government, guides its student to a more spiritual conception and idea. Christian Science teaches that man is governed by divine Principle, God, and that he is only rightly governed when governed by divine Principle. It is impossible for man to be governed and controlled by both God and man in Science. The greatest evil in human government is the temptation to control. Control indicates power, earthly power and domination, and is the source of most of the world's troubles, including war. In Christian Science a man is not a ruler, does not control, does not trespass on the rights of others, does not force matters to a conclusion, does not seek to dominate or govern, because this is impossible where God, divine Principle, is the only power.

Every student of Christian Science, working out his individual problem in divine Mind with the light that God gives him, is entitled to be left alone in whatever position Mind has placed him. Whether he be an usher, a Sunday school teacher, or the holder of any one of the many offices in the church activities, he is entitled to his God-given freedom of thought and action. Christian Scientists, of all individuals, must learn to mind their own business, and that means to reflect the one Mind and to allow every other student the same right and privilege.

The only opportunity to control given the student of Christian Science is when he is called upon to control his own thoughts and the erroneous claims of sin, sickness, and death. If he is doing his duty in this, he will have no time for meddling with his fellow students. In the textbook of Christian Science, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," on page 106, Mrs. Eddy says: "Man is properly self-governed only when he is guided rightly and governed by his Maker, divine Truth and Love. Man's rights are invaded when the divine order is interfered with, and the mental trespasser incurs the divine penalty due this crime."

Nothing Too Good To Be True

HELEN J. ALLEN

A COMMON remark, even among professing Christians, when some very desirable possibility is contemplated, is this: "Oh, I'm afraid that is too good to be true." There is a tendency to feel that, while there is a beautiful land somewhere where our dreams may come true, it is necessarily very far removed. One of the helpful truths which Christian Science is teaching is that since God is good and ever present and since man is His expression, that which is good is true and is brought into our personal experience just in proportion as we put ourselves under His law. Thus it is proved that nothing is too good to be true. We must never, however, think of error as a real power. We must refuse to allow it to seem to build a fence of limitation, within which we are supposed to remain as prisoners waiting for death to admit us into a land of greater freedom and possibilities. Error is ever ready with its claim that it is powerful, and it would have us feel that that power is directed against each one of us personally, more than against any one else. It may even admit that God is good, that Christian Science can heal, and that many by using Christian Science have been healed and are helping others to experience healing. "But," it may argue, "You yourself cannot demonstrate this great truth." Steadfast resistance to such temptation, however, entirely overcomes it. All thought of personality is lost sight of, and one is simply conscious of the allness and goodness of God and of man's ability to reflect Principle.

The writer has found that while many of her earlier aims have become possible of realization, the study of Christian Science has given her the wisdom to see that what was not really good can no longer present itself as attractive. Other aims are being realized so beautifully and so wonderfully, not because she has consciously put forth any effort to bring them about, but because while she has been busy about the "Father's business" they have just naturally worked out. Mrs. Eddy tells us in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 360), "You are bringing out your own ideal," and in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 204), "The baptism of the Holy Ghost is the spirit of Truth cleansing from all sin; giving mortals new motives, new purposes, new affections, all pointing upward." In the following paragraph she continues: "By purifying human thought, this state of mind permeates with increased harmony all the minutiæ of human affairs. It brings with it wonderful foresight, wisdom, and power; it unselfs the mortal purpose, gives steadiness to resolve, and success to endeavor."

Digitized by Google

"Run the straight race"

WILLIAM ROSS

THE following verse from one of the many beautiful hymns in the Christian Science Hymnal (p. 251) has a wealth of meaning to Christian Scientists to-day:—

Run the straight race thro' God's good grace,
Lift up thine eyes, and seek His face;
Life with its way before us lies,
Christ is the path, and Christ the prize.

Through our consecrated efforts to rely on Principle, we are finding a deeper sense of joy, gratitude, harmony, and peace in our lives than we have ever experienced before. Why? Because when error would claim to run to and fro in the earth screaming, the loyal Christian Scientist, gaining steadfastness and calmness day by day, is looking outward and upward through the mist of material sense, away from the shadows of earth "into the glorious liberty of the children of God." With this viewpoint there is no difficulty in solving the individual problems of the day. Healing continually follows this attitude of thought, and a better sense of humanity is gained thereby. What glorious opportunities we now have of running the straight race and following our Master in the narrow way! The great Way-shower persistently declared his oneness with the Father, and he acknowledged no other power. Strict obedience to the demands of Principle will give us a clear vision and bring into our experience the demonstration of the truth of those words of our Leader in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 167), "Only through radical reliance on Truth can scientific healing power be realized." The unfoldment of truth as consciousness pierces the mists of false beliefs and personal sense, and gives us full confidence in the ability of our Father-Mother God to govern His universe harmoniously. We can go on our way rejoicing, in proportion as we realize that that which seemeth to defile and make a lie never did and never can enter the reality of being.

Selected Articles

["Holy Places"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U. S. A., Feb. 27, 1920]

"Idolatry," writes Mrs. Eddy on page 307 of her book "Miscellaneous Writings," "is an easily-besetting sin of all peoples." In nothing, perhaps, is the truth of this statement so evident as in the almost universal tendency, in many religions, to endow certain places with special sanctity. The Muhammedan has his Mecca, the Hindu his Benares, the Thibetan his Lhasa, whilst the world as a whole is filled with lesser shrines of varying degrees of sanctity. All through its long history this form of idolatry was one of the besetting sins of Israel. The evil which so many of her kings did in the sight of God was in building up the "high places" of the heathen. So deep-rooted, indeed, was this demand for a holy place, for some visible abode of Deity, that neither Moses nor his successors made any attempt to abolish it altogether. Just as the law of an "eye for an eye" sought to curb revenge and not to abolish it, so in the tabernacle in the wilderness and the temple at Jerusalem is to be seen an effort to give to the people a purified symbol, which, in time, if regarded aright, would, as it did in Jesus of Nazareth, give place to a wholly spiritual concept.

Every now and again, the great spiritual seers in Israel caught something more than a glimpse of what it all meant, as, for instance, when Solomon, at the dedication of the temple, broke through the mesmerism of material glory that surrounded him to the great spiritual fact in the words, "Behold, the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot contain thee; how much less this house that I have builded?" Nevertheless, the question of a holy place remained one of the great problems in Israel, so much so that one of the first questions asked of Jesus by the Samaritan woman as she stood talking with him by the well at Sychar was one as to the supremacy of Jerusalem as a place of worship. She had perceived that he was a prophet, and here was an opportunity which she must not let pass to have an opinion on so great an issue. The fathers of her people had worshiped "in this mountain," but the Jews insisted that Jerusalem was the place where men ought to worship. What did Jesus think of it? And Jesus did not hesitate. He told her plainly that the hour was coming when neither at Jerusalem nor yet in that mountain men should worship the Father. For the hour was not only coming, but had already come, when the true worshipers of God should worship Him "in spirit and in truth." And then he added the words, "God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth."

Christ Jesus himself, of course, worshiped God in every place. He taught impartially in the temple court, in the village synagogue, in the house at Capernaum, from a boat thrust out a little way from the shore, and when the day's work was over he went up alone into the Mount of Olives. When the disciples came to him to point out to him the beauties of the temple, he told them that the day would come when there should not be one stone left on another that should not be thrown down. To Jesus of Nazareth there were obviously no such things as holy places, for all places were holy; whilst, as to holiness, he found it in the spiritual perception of a Roman centurion on the shores of Galilee, in the heart of a Syrophœnician woman on the road to Tyre and Sidon, or in a cottage at Bethany.

Jesus' immediate disciples followed his example. Holy places never found a place in their teaching. But, as the years went by and materiality obscured more and more the vision of the Christ, the holy place reappeared. The stupendous statement by the well of Sychar was forgotten, and the shrine showed an increasing disposition to reassert itself. By the time that the first light of the Reformation began to dawn over Christendom, in the fourteenth century, the sanctity of place and person was the alpha and omega of Christianity. Those people were accounted unquestionably the most devout who joined one or another of the endless processions of pilgrims which spread themselves over the world like a net, making their way now to this holy place and now to that, whilst those considered to be most blessed among people on earth were undoubtedly those who dwelt in these places.

The Reformation was to a very large extent a revolt against this form of idolatry. For a time everything went down before it. Shrine, church, and altar alike were overthrown. Much of this change was permanent, but the belief was not scientifically destroyed, hence it constantly reappeared in other forms. Superstition was in some degree banished, but straightway sentiment mounted the throne in its stead. The holy place reappeared in the form of "another world," very far from being wholly removed from materiality, in which the central figure was the human Jesus. Again and again the evil spirit was cast out of the man and wandered through dry places, seeking rest. And finding none it decided to return, and did return, often with other evil spirits worse than itself. The human mind fought from ditch to ditch for some human link with what it called God.

Then, in 1866, came the discovery of Christian Science by Mary Baker Eddy, and the old beliefs of the holy place, a sensuous earth, heaven, and hell as commonly viewed, were challenged by her teaching. The great truth which Mrs. Eddy revealed is wonderfully summarized by her on page 468 of her textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," in answer to her own question, "What is the scientific statement of being?": "There is no life, truth, intelligence, nor substance in matter. All is infinite Mind and its infinite manifestation, for God is All-in-all. Spirit is immortal Truth; matter is mortal error. Spirit is the real and eternal; matter is the unreal and temporal. Spirit is God, and man is His image and likeness. Therefore man is not material; he is spiritual."

Here, then, is the real and the only holy place, and it is altogether in a vision which is wholly spiritual. Here the human association finds no attachment and the mere locus of the human manifestation of good commands no special reverence, because it finds no special recognition. To the young man who addressed him as "Good Master" Jesus said, "Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is, God." "Little children," wrote John nineteen hundred years ago, "keep yourselves from idols."

[John M. Dean in Johnson City (Tenn.) Staff]

The Staff of a recent date reports a "popular evangelist" as denouncing Christian Science in language forceful, if not elegant. It is characteristic of some people to abuse everything that does not square with their peculiar ideas, but thinking people do not accept vituperation as argument. Any one can throw mud, but kindness and tolerance and courtesy are Christian graces which some modern pulpiteers would do well to cultivate. Christian Scientists are in a large measure fulfilling the commands of Jesus to preach the gospel and heal the sick, yet for these works some of his professed followers delight in stoning them. In the fullness of time this critic will learn that intemperate language can never establish his own religion or destroy the religion of another. If he has something better than Christian Science to offer, the world will finally accept it, and that will be the end of Christian Science; but destructive criticism which stresses only one phase of the Master's work while denouncing those who are honestly striving to practice his full teaching, must go down before the advancing thought of an enlightened Christianity.

[James M. Stevens in the Journal-News, Two Harbors, Minn.]

The minister writing in a recent issue states that "in last Sunday evening's address we proved that the God of Christian Science is not the God of the Christian church." There are over a hundred recognized different Christian religions, each having its own concept of God. I do not know just what our critic's belief is concerning God, or upon just what authority he appoints himself to be a judge over other people's religions. However, from his statement that "next Sunday we will show that the teachings of Mrs. Eddy are not Christian," I suspect that his picture of the "God of Christian Science" was not very correctly drawn.

Christian Science adopts unqualifiedly Webster's definition of God, "The Supreme Being," and that of the Standard Dictionary, "The one Supreme Being, self-existent and eternal." It also accepts Jesus' statement that "God is a Spirit," and John's declaration that "God is love"; also the Bible teaching that God is Truth, that He is intelligence or Mind, the only power and presence, the only cause or creator, the perfect and infinite All-in-all. Because God encompasses within Himself all intelligence, truth, order, law, and perfection of being, and because Principle best conveys this understanding of God, Principle is used as a synonym for God; and because God is tender, loving, merciful, steadfast, and enduring, we speak of Him as divine Principle. Divine Principle, or Principle, in Christian Science, has not the cold, abstract meaning which evidently our critic applies to it, but to the loyal Christian Scientist it is an endearing term conveying to him the tender care and loving protection of an unchanging, compassionate, good, and affectionate Father, to whom our every need is known and by whom that need will be supplied. God is Love, and Love is Principle, not person.

In Christian Science, law is not a synonym for God, but God is the only true lawgiver, and the law of God or divine law is the law of life, health, holiness, completeness, and perfection. This divine law is ever present and available to all.

A Christian is defined by Webster as "one whose inward and outward life is conformed to the doctrines of Christ." Jesus taught and practiced meekness, forgiveness, charitableness, compassion, love. He comforted the sorrowing, forgave the sinner, healed the sick, raised the dead, and he left this promise: "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also." Christian Science is founded upon the teachings and works of Christ Jesus. Christian Scientists accept Jesus as their example, and earnestly, consistently, and consecratedly endeavor to fulfill his commands and enter into the joy of his promises.

The teachings of Mrs. Eddy as set forth in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" and her other works are unqualifiedly Christian. They are the simple, direct, comforting, healing, and regenerating truths which Jesus taught and practiced. Mrs. Eddy taught nothing for which she had not positive Scriptural authority, and that her teachings are Christian is proved by the fact that she and her loyal followers have been able to do many of the works which Jesus did, healing sin, sickness, and sorrow. That "God is not mocked," is a primary teaching of Christian Science, as is also that "whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." Christian Scientists are constantly sowing the tender, compassionate, loving, healing, and regenerating truths of the Master, and from this seed they are reaping health, happiness, and holiness for themselves and for others.

[Aaron E. Brandt in The Gazette and Daily, York, Pa.]

If the clergyman, whose attack on Christian Science is reported in a recent issue, intended to show his lack of knowledge regarding the subject, he could hardly have taken a more effective method. It is rather surprising that before committing the folly of giving his reasons for the attack, he did not realize that if one-tenth of them were true, there would be no Christian Scientists, and certainly not eighteen hundred churches and societies of growing congregations scattered throughout the world. If the statements made by him against Christian Science, or what he supposed it to be, were counted, the number would be found to correspond very closely to the sum total of misrepresentations contained in his sermon. Christian Scientists can feel grateful that this fact is so apparent to all well informed people, including clergymen who to-day are preaching the truths of Christian Science to their congregations, and who would unhesitatingly contradict all the critic's assertions regarding Christian Science as a false revelation.

The simple fact is that Mrs. Eddy, who was a devout Christian and Bible student from her childhood, discovered that the truth which Christ Jesus taught and practiced is a demonstrable, spiritual science; that it is based upon unchangeable spiritual law, and therefore available in all ages to all problems of humanity, including the healing of sickness and disease. She therefore aptly called the truth Jesus taught "Christian Science," and there is nothing from the beginning to the end of Christian Science, as contained in Mrs. Eddy's writings, which is not based upon, and logically drawn from, Christ's law of truth.

Therefore when the critic says that Christian Science is a jumble of "a little philosophy, psychology, religion, therapeutics, mesmerism, mind healing, animal magnetism, faith cure . . . pressed down the waiting throats of an ever gullible public," and that Christian Science should be stamped as a "quack nostrum," he says it also, however unwittingly, of the teaching of Christ Jesus. The counsel of Gamaliel should teach him to refrain from such folly. Referring to the persecution of Peter and other apostles because of their Christian work, Gamaliel said, "Take heed . . . for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought: but if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; lest haply ye be found even to fight against God." "Clergymen," wrote Mrs. Eddy, "occupying the watchtowers of the world, should uplift the standard of Truth. They should so raise their hearers spiritually, that their listeners will love to grapple with a new, right idea and broaden their concepts. Love of Christianity rather than love of popularity, should stimulate clerical labor and progress. Truth should emanate from the pulpit, but never be strangled there. A special privilege is vested in the ministry. How shall it be used? Sacredly, in the interests of humanity, not of sect" (Science and Health, p. 235). Christian Scientists are very grateful in the knowledge that many clergymen have risen above time-honored creeds and dogmas; that they are awake to the fact that in Christian Science "truth is revealed. It needs only to be practised," as Mrs. Eddy wrote on page 174 of Science and Health, and that this healing truth never was intended to be limited, nor need longer to be relegated, to a remote period.

The critic's charge that Christian Science was not discovered by Mrs. Eddy but by Dr. P. P. Quimby seems rather inconsistent with his position that it is a jumble of a little of everything. It is an admission that after all is said there was a discovery of Christian Science by some one. Now there are two main facts regarding the discovery of Christian Science which put the critic in a hopeless position on this point. One is that Christian Science was not discovered until after the decease of Dr. Quimby, and not until after Mrs. Eddy was healed instantaneously of a supposedly fatal injury, while pondering the Scriptures. And the second is that nothing has been found in Dr. Quimby's practice which in any respect resembles the practice of Christian Science. The truth is, as Mrs. Eddy discovered in due time, that the two methods are diametrically opposed to each other, the one being a mesmeric influence of human will, the other an understanding of spiritual truth. In her writings, Mrs. Eddy dwells upon human psychology, material philosophy, magnetism, faith cures, et cetera, only to show the great difference between such human thought processes and Christian Science. Her writings in this respect show an analysis of cause and effect and depth of thought exceeding any other work ever written on the subject.

Before the critic attempts to show that Christian Science is anti-Christian, he should be sure that he really understands Christ's teaching by healing the sick as he directed. If Christian Science were in agreement with the dogmas of popular theology, it would not be in accord with true Bible teaching, and could not prove itself by its works. When one teaching answers the test Christ Jesus gave, and another does not, there is only one logical conclusion to be drawn therefrom. Christian Science is growing apace because of that conclusion, and more healing would undoubtedly be accomplished were it not for that unbelief in human consciousness which prevented even Christ Jesus from doing many works in his own country.

Christian Scientists are grateful for every sin overcome and every case of sickness healed through an understanding of Christian truth; for they are thus proving to the world that Christ, "the divine manifestation of God, which comes to the flesh to destroy incarnate error" (Science and Health, p. 583), is not limited to a partial salvation or to a special period, but is here and now, as Mrs. Eddy amply proved, a full and complete Savior of mankind.

Is This the Truth

THOMAS LAWRY

IS this the truth? That God is Love—
Not like to love; not nearly love;
But really, wholly, always Love—
The very Principle thereof?

Is this the truth? That perfect Love
Can fill the heart and so o'erflow
That with its tide all fear doth move—
And with it death, disease, and woe?

Then come, Thou God of love, to me,
And let me in Thee live and move;
Be Thou my guide: I'll follow Thee
In all Thy paths, thou God of love.

The Spirit and the Letter

When Mrs. Eddy wrote, on page 468 of Science and Health, "All is infinite Mind and its infinite manifestation, for God is All-in-all," she made a statement so definite that it ought to be incapable of any misunderstanding. Divine Mind and its manifestation being infinite, there is no room necessarily for anything else to exist, except as a counterfeit of reality. Consequently, every phase of materiality, whether mental or apparently physical, is necessarily a lie about something existing in infinite Mind and its infinite manifestation. This being so, mortal mind itself, and everything proceeding from it, is merely an untrue suggestion, and has to be resisted as such. This suggestion varies in its intensity of evil, but it is always evil. The supposititious good of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil is, that is to say, never really good, but only the human mind's concept of good, which it suggests as good to all those whose ears are sufficiently attuned to the knowledge of good and evil to accept it as good.

It is perfectly easy to see what this means, by the simplest of illustrations. That man needs physical food to sustain him is, in the philosophy of humanity, a wise suggestion, intended to preserve existence, and so a suggestion of good. But, as a matter of fact, the very suggestion that life is sustained by material food is a lie, and consequently a suggestion of evil. The mere fact that any man is convinced of the necessity for this food lays him open to the danger of starvation and to all the physical law that lies behind what is called the necessity of proper nutriment. An understanding of Principle begins to undermine this suggestion and this so-called law of matter, for in proportion as the individual grasps the fact that the necessity for food is a purely mental belief, the law of material sustenance is broken, and the emancipation of the individual from this particular law is commenced.

Now it is quite true that physical life is nearer Principle than physical death, therefore it is far nearer Principle for a man to eat and keep himself alive than for a man to lose his belief of physical life through starvation. Mrs. Eddy makes this perfectly clear on page 442 of Science and Health, where she writes, "Christ, Truth, gives mortals temporary food and clothing until the material, transformed with the ideal, disappears, and man is clothed and fed spiritually." This does not mean, it need scarcely be said, that the mortal should accept this apparent necessity for temporary food and clothing as anything but temporary. He should, on the contrary, set himself to work out his own salvation so as to destroy this belief, and gradually gain the dominion over the flesh which will raise him above the limitations of the flesh. Whilst, however, he is working out his salvation in this way, demonstrating his understanding of Principle to accomplish the end in view, he should beware of any temptation to go beyond his power to demonstrate Truth, which would lead him into the neglect of proper sustenance, and so render him guilty of listening to a malicious suggestion which would cause him to make himself sick or to risk his life by attempting something unscientific inasmuch as entirely beyond his power of proof.

It is this malicious mental suggestion which has to be watched against at all times. Indeed, it is the individual's power to resist and to dominate the suggestion of the human mind that constitutes the mastery of his understanding of Principle. So perpetually is it necessary for him to be on his guard against such suggestion, that Mrs. Eddy, on page 42 of the Manual of The Mother Church, has laid it down that, "It shall be the duty of every member of this Church to defend himself daily against aggressive mental suggestion, and not be made to forget nor to neglect his duty to God, to his Leader, and to mankind. By his works he shall be judged,—and justified or condemned." Now in this passage Mrs. Eddy is not satisfied with merely indicating the duty of a Christian Scientist to defend himself against mental suggestion, but she drives home the fact that the individual will be judged, not by his good intentions, not by his doing the best he knows, but by his obedience to Principle and his understanding of metaphysics, which will enable him to demonstrate the protection of Principle. Nobody in a business was ever saved from the effects of bad finance by pleading that he did the best he knew. Principle never pardons mistakes, but leaves the person who makes the mistake to learn through the bitter experience of making a mistake; in other words, Principle judges individuals not, as has been said, by their intentions or their opinions but by their understanding of Principle.

This is why an understanding of metaphysics must always go hand in hand with the spirit of Christian Science. A knowledge of metaphysics is a compass in the hands of a Christian Scientist, and no man can resign his compass into the hands of anybody else and permit that person to lay his course for him. Jesus made what this means perfectly clear when he said that if the blind lead the blind, both would fall into the ditch. If a person cannot steer his own course, it is quite impossible that that person should be able to judge the ability of somebody else to steer it for him. He may have the utmost faith in the metaphysical understanding of another person, but he must test that metaphysical understanding for himself, and only when he has tested it to the extent of finding that it steers him in the footsteps of the Christ, will he know that that person has been a safe guide. But what teaches him that the guide has been a safe one is that with the course laid for him by the guide he has been able to steer his own way. In other words, aggressive mental suggestion may easily come to a person by his accepting statements he has not proved or is incapable of proving for himself. The wise guide never allows this to be done, but insists that the person who is to be guided shall test for himself the advice given him, and shall only accept it as true when he has steered his own course accurately by means of the metaphysical instructions offered to him for his guidance.

The desire for good, the spirit of Christianity, is perhaps more widely existent than people think. Discouragement comes to those desiring good, largely because of their failures and mistakes, because they possess no compass by which they may steer their course. Actually, the compass does exist for every man, in the pages of the Bible, but he must be able to read his compass and to make his reckoning, otherwise the compass is of little use to him. The ability to do this lies in his understanding of metaphysics, and that surely is why Mrs. Eddy has stated, on page 495 of Science and Health, "Study thoroughly the letter and imbibe the spirit. Adhere to the divine Principle of Christian Science and follow the behests of God, abiding steadfastly in wisdom, Truth, and Love."

FREDERICK DIXON.

The Ideal Platform

THE platform of a political party is an attempt to phrase certain opinions and theories about government. The only platform that could ever be ideal does not consist, however, of mere opinions and theories but must be absolute Principle expressed. This ideal is possible of statement in Christian Science, and has been stated over and over again with the variety of infinity by Mrs. Eddy throughout her works, which are altogether correlative with the Scriptures. The truly righteous platform must be a platform of healing, and healing is simply the consummate wholeness of Principle manifest as right activity. Anything less than the healing which comes about through the understanding of divine intelligence is not real relief from any false condition, whether it be called political, physical, economic, or moral. Hence any seeming condition, to be rightly dealt with, must be considered in the light of what the divine Mind knows about it, for the divine consciousness knows the whole idea to take the place of any sense of limitation.

On page 226 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy says: "God has built a higher platform of human rights, and He has built it on diviner claims. These claims are not made through code or creed, but in demonstration of 'on earth peace, good-will toward men.' Human codes, scholastic theology, material medicine and hygiene, fetter faith and spiritual understanding. Divine Science rends asunder these fetters, and man's birthright of sole allegiance to his Maker asserts itself." Complete allegiance to divine Principle as the one truly governing power is what is always primarily essential. One who understands and practices in accord with Principle finds his rights fully protected and proves ceaselessly unfolding success in all righteous endeavor. Thus he has nothing whatever to fear, because he has turned away from human methods to the divine way.

There is just one infinite Principle which governs all that is real of labor, of suffrage, of cooperative activity of every sort. The knowing and demonstrating of this is the only remedy for supposed difficulties, whether they be of treaty making, of law enforcement, of provisions for revenue, or of whatever else concerns the public welfare. The whole solution for any problems lies in the truth that the divine Mind is the one source of action. It is infinite intelligence, God, the one spiritual cause of all real effect, that must be discerned, understood, and manifested in order that harmony in vigorous living may be proved as the constant experience of the true man. The one relationship, revealed through Christian Science, is the relationship of man, spiritual idea, to the infinite Mind, which alone is Soul. In other words, the spiritual man cooperates perfectly with divine intelligence. This is the cooperation which is immensely better than any human sense of cooperation that has ever been devised. As Mrs. Eddy says in "The People's Idea of God" (p. 11), "Above the platform of human rights let us build another staging for diviner claims,—even the supremacy of Soul over sense, wherein man cooperates with and is made subject to his Maker."

The harmonious operation of Principle is all that any one could ever desire. It has continued, continues now, and will continue forever, quite untouched by any mortal suppositions. In proportion as one turns to Principle and understands its operation, one finds the sense of human discord, whether it be called disease, economic disorder, or by any other name, subsiding into its natural nothingness. The real demonstration of Christian Science is the very knowing of Principle. That in itself is good, and as it is found to be all-sufficient, it necessarily takes the place of any supposed lack of knowing and experiencing Principle. Just to be alive, as idea expressing Mind, is to demonstrate Life, or, in other words, to show forth the one Principle which alone can cause true living. When it is understood that the only Life there is must be Principle, harmoniously expressed in every detail, the seeming operations of any erroneous sense of things give way. The fact is that the genuine creation does necessarily operate wholly in accord with Principle, never has operated in any other way, and never will cease so to operate. Before this absolute Truth, consciously understood, defective and inefficient human systems disappear. Through the vanishing of the worst defects first, they are, to human sense, improved until they are ultimately supplanted altogether by the divine activity which always has been the actuality, in spite of multifarious illusions of nothingness.

Because mortals, as politicians or as human schemers of any sort, have not realized what this process is, they have floundered around in illusions for ages. Yet "one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." So the flounderings of the supposititious mortal mind, with all its methods, are even now naught in the sight of the one divine consciousness which is all there is. The true operation of Principle, the perfect cooperation of spiritual activity with Principle, is now and always has been. One must perforce resolve to stand for himself on this platform, for on this basis only is healing accomplished. "Mental quackery," Mrs. Eddy tells us on page 458 of Science and Health, "rests on the same platform as all other quackery. The chief plank in this platform is the doctrine that Science has two principles in partnership, one good and the other evil,—one spiritual, the other material,—and that these two may be simultaneously at work on the sick. This theory is supposed to favor practice from both a mental and a material standpoint. Another plank in the platform is this, that error will finally have the same effect as truth." In place of any such grossly false sense of things, Christian Science shows the one perfect platform, that divine Principle is the sole power governing the true man now and always. The demonstration of this is man's eternal privilege.

Among the Churches

Current Notes

MURPHYSBORO, ILL.—The Christian Science Society of Murphysboro has purchased the old Logan property on Walnut Street, and will later build a church on the site. The consideration for the property was $4000. The Christian Science Society, after two or three years' work in Murphysboro, finds itself with a fairly good membership, which has grown steadily from the first.—Republican-Era.

SAN MATEO, CALIF.—First Church of Christ, Scientist, which recently purchased a piece of property on the corner of Monte Diablo Avenue and the state highway, is making arrangements to begin work on the construction of a beautiful church on this property.—News-Leader.

The Lectures

GARY, IND. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by W. P. Cottingham, who said in part:—

The word science is defined as "systematized knowledge of any one department of mind or matter; acknowledged truths and laws." Then it follows that systematized knowledge of that department of mind dealing with healing sickness and sin may properly be termed science; and when this is the Christian method of healing taught and practiced by Christ Jesus and by his followers for three hundred years after him, then surely its proper name is Christian Science. Through a knowledge of its truths, its followers are learning to understand God aright, are learning to depend upon His loving care in all times of stress, be it sickness, sorrow, or sin, and are at all times endeavoring to be mindful of the tenets to which they subscribe in joining the church, the last of which states (Science and Health, p. 497), "And we solemnly promise to watch, and pray for that Mind to be in us which was also in Christ Jesus; to do unto others as we would have them do unto us; and to be merciful, just, and pure."

BELLINGHAM, WASH. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by E. Ralph Kooken, who said in part:—

Christian Science does not usually come to those who are entirely satisfied with their present condition. Those who do feel satisfied, however, are very few. The general usage of the world deals out to each one of us such a moiety of its delectable things and such an abundance of its dissatisfactions that, if we are entirely honest with ourselves, we soon come to admit our great need of just what Christian Science has to offer.

So these lectures are given both for the purpose of extending this offer to you and for the purpose of explaining in some measure the terms of the offer. You are invited to give earnest attention to the conditions upon which this good may come into your experience. We are assured that these are the simple teachings of Jesus. We are assured that these works are a repetition in some degree of the great works done by the wayside and in the villages of Galilee centuries ago. The question is, How were those works done? Were they merely phenomenal exhibitions of some strange power that is no longer available, or did the teachings of Jesus contain an enduring principle, a Science of Christianity? These are the questions confronting Christendom, and these are the questions which the speaker of the evening will answer.

JOHANNESBURG, TRANSVAAL, SOUTH AFRICA (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Aubrey L. Palmer, who said in part:—

In these days of wars, revolutions, and general unrest mankind needs, more than ever before, Christianity,—not a Christianity of ritual and dogma, not a Christianity of pomp and ceremony, but the pure, practical Christianity of Jesus the Christ, redolent with love and "good will toward men." Christian Science has come to this age to prove to mankind that the Christianity our Master taught and commended to his followers, when faithfully and honestly applied, is the true and only solution for all the problems of the world to-day.

MAYWOOD, ILL. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Mrs. Beatrice B. Carlsson, who said in part:—

Mankind has ever been seeking to know more of God. The prophets caught glimpses of truth and were able to do mighty works through faith. It was not, however, until Jesus' time that a definite rule or law was laid down and taught whereby man might demonstrate over the flesh, or over materiality. Our blessed Master demonstrated the truth, destroyed sin, and rose above materiality. For a time there were those who followed him and did mighty works. There was occasional healing through prayer, but again in our own time the truth has been expressed so that we can demonstrate out of the flesh as Jesus taught. This has come about through the teachings of Christian Science.

MIDDLESBORO, KY. (Society).—Lecturer introduced by Mrs. Nellie M. Arthur, who said in part:—

Jesus Christ, our Savior and Way-shower, commanded his followers to "preach the gospel," to "heal the sick," and he also said, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also." Christian Scientists rely on this promise, and they have learned that when they understand the spiritual law through which Jesus healed the sick, and properly apply it, they can heal the sick also. There is nothing new in all this. Mrs. Eddy, when she wrote and published "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," made plain the teachings of the Savior and the spiritual import of the Bible.

NAMPA, IDAHO (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Mrs. Pete McMahon, who said in part:—

The question Pilate asked of Jesus, "What is truth," is being repeated to-day. The questions, Why am I sick? Why is God's man sick and sinful? Why does God permit evil? Why is not God's kingdom harmonious?—these, and numerous other questions, are continually being asked by a world of suffering humanity. To the honest seekers of truth, these questions have all been satisfactorily answered through the inspired words of that noble woman, Mary Baker Eddy, in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures."

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN. (Third Church).—Lecturer introduced by J. Edwin Jensen, who said in part:—

In Jesus' time the Jews waited and watched for a Messiah, a crowned king, whom they would recognize by his material might and power, to deliver them from their enemies, and they ignored and scoffed at the simple Nazarene with his wonderful works. So to-day mankind is waiting and watching for something, it knows not what, to save it from its enemies of sin and sickness, want and woe, while Christian Science, which is the same truth that Jesus taught and practiced, is meeting with a similar reception in some quarters in spite of the strong proofs, given daily, of its efficacy.

PORTSMOUTH, ENGLAND (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Capt. Greatwood, who said in part:—

The great question that has always been asked by perplexed humanity is, "What is truth?" and Jesus answered this nearly two thousand years ago. He said, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." The age in which he lived, however, was so material that, with the exception of a few faithful followers, none understood his teaching or believed in what he taught. He told his disciples to go "into all the world" and "preach the gospel to every creature" and to "heal the sick;" he also said, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also," and for three hundred years the early Christian church obeyed these sayings of our Lord. But although his gospel has been preached since then through every land, the second part of his command has not been observed, and the demonstration, or proof, of the teaching of the Messiah has been conspicuous by its absence. The coming of Christian Science has once again brought to light the healing power of Truth, and is proving to-day that every promise of God is available here and now, and that He is "a very present help in trouble," to whom it is possible for all to turn in their cares and sorrows and get all the help they need. Before Christian Science came into our lives, our fears and discords seemed very real to us, and God seemed a long way off. But Christian Science is reversing this. It is showing us that in proportion as we make God first in our thoughts these inharmonies disappear.

TEMPLE, TEXAS (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by S. D. Stitt, who said in part:—

The question which most concerns mankind to-day, and in fact the question which should most occupy its mind, is that one which was asked our Savior two thousand years ago. We have no record of our Savior's reply to Pilate, but we do find that at another time Jesus told those Jews that believed on him, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." No matter what the problem may be that we have to solve, whether a financial situation, a physical condition, or a moral question, what we need concerning the problem is to know the truth, and when this is done the problem is solved. Christian Science teaches us the truth. In fact it leads man into truth, and when it is diligently studied, understood, and applied it makes man free from all that is unlike God.

ELMIRA, N. Y. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Mrs. Anna W. Nichols, who said in part:—

Deeply implanted in the heart of man is the love of life and the desire for happiness. In the gospel according to John, life is thus defined by our Master himself, "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." Jesus also said, "If ye continue in my word . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." When we consider all that the word freedom implies, we find that it includes our deliverance from sin, disease, and all discordant conditions. In fact it means happiness in its fullest sense. Jesus thus answers the yearning of all mankind, assures us of eternal life, present and eternal happiness, and makes it all a matter of knowing,—a knowledge of the true God, and of His Son, Christ Jesus. It therefore becomes clear that a mere belief in God is not enough; understanding is essential. This understanding, as explained by Jesus, assumes the nature of law. It does things. It makes us free. Using Webster's definition of science as "accumulated and accepted knowledge . . . systematized . . . with reference to . . . the operation of general laws," it would come under the head of science, and as it was taught by Jesus the Christ, it would of necessity be Christian Science.

PULLMAN, WASH. (Society).—Lecturer introduced by Mrs. Alma D. Bixby, who said in part:—

Since the beginning of the world, humanity has been seeking that which heals and saves. Many of the early prophets caught glorious glimpses of God as infinite Love, "who," as David wrote in the Psalms, "forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases." But it was not until the prophecy of Isaiah was fulfilled, "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor . . . The Prince of Peace," that one came who scientifically understood, lived, and demonstrated the unchanging law of God. Jesus the Christ proved the potency of this law by healing the sick and the sinning, feeding the multitudes, and raising the dead. He commanded his disciples to "preach the gospel" and "heal the sick;" and he said to them, "These signs shall follow them that believe." Later he promised them, "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever."

About fifty years ago, through her own marvelous healing, Mary Baker Eddy made her great discovery that the law of God, which Christ Jesus demonstrated, was for all mankind and for all time. In our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy wrote on page 332, "Jesus demonstrated Christ; he proved that Christ is the divine idea of God—the Holy Ghost, or Comforter, revealing the divine Principle, Love, and leading into all truth."

ST. LOUIS, MO. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Miss Agnes Ruth Hoffinger, who said in part:—

I do not suppose there is any one in the world to-day who is not asking himself the question: What is the remedy for the suffering, the sorrow, the dissatisfaction, the unrest that exists everywhere in the world? My friends, we students of Christian Science have nearly all of us come from the very depths of suffering and despair, and we have found a remedy in Christian Science. We have learned that, in spite of all the suffering, in spite of all the evil and the discord of which the world seems so full, in the words of the poet Longfellow,

> Things are not what they seem.
> . . . . . .
> Life is real! life is earnest!

And because Christian Science has meant so much to us, we want to share it with those who are still weary and heavy laden, in order that it may help them as it has helped us.

GREAT BEND, KAN. (Society).—Lecturer introduced by Miss Florence Poole, who said in part:—

It is a special privilege and a pleasure to welcome a second audience to a Christian Science lecture in this Court Room,—the spot designated and set apart in this community for the administration of justice; for Christian Science has come to my understanding as a religion of justice, infinite justice, whose aim is to harm none and bless all mankind, a religion whose right thinking and right living take away the wrongs but not the rights of mankind.

The Great Bend Tribune.

WINONA, MINN. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Henry M. Kinney, who said in part:—

The age in which we are living is such an intensely material one that all things, even including the Bible, have been interpreted materially. But even the materialist acknowledges the power of thought. A prominent statistician of to-day says, "Statistics show clearly that we have gone crazy over material things and have forgotten that the real joys of life come by other means. Something must be done to bring people to their senses in order that they may think along better lines."

Within the past fifty-five years there has come into the world a revelation of Truth that is teaching man to think,—to think aright. Christian Science, or the Science of Christianity, is leading man away from matter into Spirit.

Testimonies of Healing

Two years ago last February my little daughter, eight years of age, returned from school one day complaining that her feet and legs pained her, and that it was with difficulty that she walked. During the next two or three days she grew worse and lost completely the use of her legs. Two physicians, specialists in their line, were called, and, while they were unable to diagnose the case, they had great fear that she might never again be able to walk, picturing to us the possibility of her being compelled to go around on crutches. It was with considerable reluctance that her mother, who was not interested in Christian Science, consented to permit the case to be handled in Science. However, the physicians were dismissed and a Christian Science practitioner began treatment; and, although she did not see the child, the result was that in about four days the child was able to walk a little; in two weeks she was apparently healed, and in three weeks she returned to school as well as ever. She has had no return of the complaint and has enjoyed the best of health to date.

For this and other blessings that have come to me and to my daughter, I am very grateful.

When quite a young girl I became acquainted with the first Christian Scientist I had ever met. Visiting at her home frequently I was quite impressed with the deep interest with which she viewed her religion. She spoke frequently of her healing in Christian Science. When I was told that God was Mind it seemed to me that it was the most reasonable statement about God I had ever heard. Though at that time I did not feel I needed religion, a few years later I did feel that need and I found that I had really never lost my inclination toward Christian Science, and finally decided to buy "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy and study it for myself. I read the book for hours each day, rejoicing that God was so clearly revealed here. After studying Christian Science for a while, its healing power was indeed proved to me. Headaches vanished, sore throat was overcome. I was an incessant novel reader, but the desire for this sort of amusement left me entirely.

Later a severe breakdown manifested itself, and this indeed seemed a hard testing time, as for about three weeks I was unable to sleep. With the aid of a practitioner this trouble was entirely overcome in a short time. Christian Science meets every need in our home and I am indeed most grateful for it and for all the activities provided by our Leader—for church membership, for our periodicals, and the privilege of class instruction. Many times our periodicals have come like a ray of light dispelling the cloud of material sense.—(Mrs.) Blanche F. Evans, Sacramento, Calif.

In grateful acknowledgment of many blessings received in Christian Science the writer gladly sends her testimony in the hope that it may help some needy one. It is some years now since I first heard of Christian Science, through a dear friend who at that time was living with me. I had to mortal sense just gone through an attack of sciatica, and it was prophesied that I would never be quite free from it. My friend told me of her new-found joy, the Christ, Truth. At first, like others, I thought it all too good to be true, but still I had just enough faith to put it to the test. A few mornings after our talk I found myself getting out of bed perfectly free, and have never had any return of the trouble.

Some time after this an attack of pneumonia was overcome in three days and I was able to get up and attend to my business. This was in midwinter. I have laid glasses aside after wearing them for twenty-five years. Constipation of three years' standing was overcome. Many minor troubles, such as burns, bruises, cuts, and a lacerated wrist have all been healed in the same way. In March of this year I was preparing a meal, when I rushed out to see an aeroplane pass over. On returning to the house, a large dark patch seemed to get in front of me wherever I moved. I wrote to the same friend who had helped me before and she took up treatment at once. This error was overcome after a few months. It was a great joy when I found it disappearing into its native nothingness. It will be better understood why my joy over this healing was so great when I explain that I had only one eye, the other having been removed under medical treatment two years before I heard of Christian Science. During all the time I was having treatment for this trouble I was able to attend to all my household duties as usual. Now I can read and sew, doing the finest work without any fear.

I am most grateful to God and to Mrs. Eddy for the glorious truth revealed to us in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," her gift to humanity, also for the loving help of my friend in my time of need, and for the knowledge revealed to me in the study of Christian Science that divine Love does indeed meet our every need.—(Miss) Lilley Norris, Burton-upon-Trent, Staffs, England.

As I was returning this morning from a very pleasant hike in the country, the memory of what I love to think of as the sweetest demonstration I have had in Christian Science came to mind, and the desire to share its lessons with others through the medium of the Sentinel also came very strongly. While reading the testimonies of healing in last week's Sentinel the same desire again came to me, and so I trust in giving this testimony it may help others, as it helped me, to see of how much greater importance it is to have even a grain of the spirit than much learning of the letter of Christian Science.

It was the quick healing of the results of a bicycle accident which occurred several years ago. Just previous to the accident, I had begun to perceive that Christian Science was by no means just another church denomination, that it did not rely on the person of any one nor upon forms of church services, but that back of all these outward appearances was a spiritual law, the understanding of which was priceless. This realization changed my entire estimate of Mrs. Eddy's great discovery. Going out into the country for a bicycle ride one Saturday afternoon this beautiful spiritual law seemed very real to me and had I obeyed its marvelous guidance, the accident would not have happened, but the pleasure of the trip caused me to turn a deaf ear to divine care, and so the evening came on, and as I had an engagement in Chicago I was speeding with my head lowered. Almost the next thing I recall was that two men were lifting me off the road on which I had lain for over twenty minutes stunned. After seeing that I was conscious, the men left. I found that the handle bars of the wheel had loosened in their socket and I had been thrown headlong onto a heap of broken stones. Returning to my room I threw myself on the bed and later awakened in pain. I did not even deny the accident, mentally or otherwise, and when Sunday morning came I was certainly in a bad plight, but all the time this spiritual law kept me from fear and I had the feeling that it would take care of me, and in my childlike simplicity I spoke to this grand law, saying, "I don't know who or what you are, but I am in a terrible fix and I will be very grateful if you will help me." In the morning, going to church seemed altogether impossible, but here again this law led me to bind up my bruises and closed eye and take the train and attend the service. I certainly presented a sorry appearance, but I had learned humility and obedience through suffering. I will not say what mental feelings I had next morning in the office where I worked, surrounded by all the men, who knew I was relying on Christian Science. But through all these ordeals this grand spiritual law took care of me—beside which a human mother's love and care were as nothing—and I had the happiness of attending church the next Sunday without any bandages and with only a few small marks left, and the following Sunday I was perfectly healed.

As a proof of the severity of the fall I will say that for some days I expectorated blood frequently and could scarcely lift my arm from my body. I did the hardest and closest figuring on office books all the week and did not lose an hour from work. The healing has taught me many things, among which is that childlike trust and faith—the spirit more than the letter of Christian Science—heals and saves.

Having received so much good and happiness since I became interested in Christian Science, I wish to send in my testimony. A little over four years ago I was a restless, discontented, unhappy woman. I had left the church of which I was a member because I made up my mind I could not pray to a God I did not know or love. Shortly after this my husband came home with "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," which a friend had lent him, and he asked me to look it over as it looked good to him. The book was in the house for about six months. I tried to understand it, but did not seem to get very far with it, until one day I was taken with a severe cold and a gathering in my head. The doctor came two and sometimes three times a day, but I could get no relief from the terrible pain in my head. I then decided to call a Christian Scientist and ask for help, which I did. The practitioner was with me for about one hour when I got up from my bed, and I had supper ready for my husband when he came home. Since then God has answered all my prayers, as I had discovered I was praying to a God of love. We have not had a doctor since, for any kind of sickness; in fact, have had very little. As soon as anything does try to manifest itself as disease, it is met and destroyed at once.

My son took up the study about the same time I did. He was nineteen years old, and when the war came entered the service as a radio man. His ship was sunk in mid-ocean, and I feel certain that the understanding he had of Christian Science was what saved the crew. As the ship was going down he took his Christian Science textbook and laid it on the table beside him. Reminded of the truth it contained, he said all fear left him. He sent a radio message out that brought a ship to them, and all on board were saved. They just had time to take to the lifeboats and get on to the other ship when their ship went down. My son did not have a Quarterly, but when he boarded this other ship some one saw him with his little book in his hand and came and handed him a Quarterly. How can I tell you how grateful I am? During the war Christian Science taught me what the ninety-first psalm means to all of us. I knew that God was with those on the water as with those on the land. My son and I are both members of The Mother Church and I have two more children who expect to join.

Words cannot express my gratitude and love to God, to Christ Jesus, and to Mrs. Eddy for making the word of God so spiritually plain.

It is with deepest gratitude that I send this testimony to the Christian Science Sentinel. Christian Science was brought to my attention several years ago. It was not long after I had graduated from college and at a time when I was very unhappy and nervously worn out. One Wednesday night I went to church with a friend whom I was visiting. During the quiet service, healing came to me. The old beliefs of loneliness, restlessness, and nervous fear fell away like an outworn garment, and I went forth from that church a new being. At that time I lived in a small town in which no one whom I knew was interested in Christian Science. Buying Science and Health and subscribing for the Sentinel and the Journal, I went back to my home for study and application, which I knew were necessary if I wished to progress in this marvelous Science. During the years which followed I had many demonstrations of the healing power of Principle, which gave me joy unspeakable and proved for me again and again the truth of our Leader's discovery. The conditions in the high school in which I taught were improved; my work there became a greater pleasure than ever before; and my home relations were bettered. Debts of long standing were taken care of. Physical ailments were healed quickly for myself and others, and gradually a group of individuals began to read the Lesson-Sermons together, until a Christian Science Society with its various activities was formed.

In the course of unfoldment greater blessings followed: class instruction, participation in the joyous support of the Christian Science periodicals, and a closer acquaintance with The Christian Science Monitor, our great international daily newspaper. I had also the privilege of a visit to Boston, the scene of Mrs. Eddy's activities. My cup seemed to run over. Then there came a change. My work became heavy. Responsibilities weighed. Suddenly in a time of seemingly great stress I found myself on the verge of what the world calls a nervous breakdown. Thereafter for a year and a half the darkness of night closed me in a hideous prison house. The problem seemed to grow more and more serious until health and reason hung in a precarious balance. Through the kindness of friends and family and the patience of practitioners, the unchanging love of Principle was manifested. Yet so strongly did mental suggestion argue to me and such was my acceptance of the lie, that I believed I was lost, that I had never known Christian Science, that though it was the only truth, I had failed to grasp its fundamental meaning. And now comes the most wonderful part of this new-old story. For, in spite of the mental hell in which I seemed to be pilloried, the healing was going on all the while. Gradually the sleeplessness departed, gradually the cloud lifted, and the ability to think was seen to be unimpaired. Then I learned what I had seen but dimly before,—that human responsibility had tried to usurp divine prerogative, that instead of letting God's kingdom unfold to me in its due season, I had sought to force the kingdom of heaven. Human pride and human intellect were lowered before such a glimpse of the allness and oneness of Mind as

I had never before had. For the first time I admitted to myself that I was glad of the experience. Since that time my days have been a succession of joyful demonstrations. The ties which apparently had to be broken have been resumed in a larger, happier way. I have indeed proved that not one thing is ever lost, for God is manifesting unto me every good and perfect gift. He has led me out of the valley of the shadow of death, restored me to health, happiness, and prosperity. In this larger sense of freedom I rejoice all day.

With sincere joy and gratitude to God, as well as to our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, I wish to testify to the many blessings which have come to us through the power of Truth. About two years ago my daughter was suddenly taken ill. High fever became manifest, accompanied by sharp pains in the side and back. I immediately declared the fact that God does not send sickness and that divine Mind creates only good, and held to these spiritual, true thoughts. During the same evening the fever lessened and she slept quietly during the night. On the following day my child was playing around, healthy and happy. I, too, have been a recipient of several blessings through Christian Science, for which I am heartily grateful. My husband has been simply showered with blessings, inasmuch as he was in the war of 1914-18 from beginning to end, and through God's goodness and care, together with the faithful work of a practitioner, was wonderfully protected from all the dangers. An unspeakable sense of gratitude fills us.

(Mrs.) L. Schüddekopf, Hannover, Germany.

I should like to express my gratitude for Christian Science. It first appealed to me about fifteen years ago because of its logic, and about six months after I first began to study it I was able to prove that its teachings are true and practical. For about ten years previous to my hearing of Christian Science I had suffered with indigestion of a severe character, and had during this time obtained only temporary relief from medicines and doctors. After the teachings of Christian Science became slightly clear, it occurred to me to prove their truth by applying them to this trouble, and after a week of faithful application, during which the claim of fear had to be met and overcome, I was completely healed, and have been so ever since.

During the years that have followed it has been my only help for troubles of all sorts, and I do not think I shall ever forget what a solid rock of support it was during the troublous first days of the late war. Amongst the many experiences during this time, one stands out in my thought at the moment, which occurred some seven or eight years ago. I had promised to sing at a concert at which many of the audience knew I was a student of Christian Science, but two days before the event I completely lost my voice and was unable to utter a resonant sound. I worked mentally to the best of my ability during the intervening two days and suffered no inconvenience except that the use of the voice was not regained. About an hour before the concert was due to start I went aside and tried to sing to see if there were any improvement, but found that it was still impossible to make any sound except an inarticulate grunt.

The only literature available to me at this time was two Monitors, and I turned to the special article on the Home Forum page of each. The first seemed particularly applicable to my case as it recounted how the children of Israel, when they came to the Red Sea and their enemies were coming up behind them, were bidden to do nothing else but trust in God. The second Monitor article alluded to the opening sentence of the Preface to Science and Health, where Mrs. Eddy says, "To those leaning on the sustaining infinite, to-day is big with blessings."

I resolved then that I would rely on God for help and I was prepared to go upon the platform in this condition rather than abandon reliance upon God. Directly this mental point was attained I felt something altering in my throat; it seemed to be opening out, and it did clear immediately, and when the time came to sing my voice was in splendid condition. Many other helpful experiences have come to me, and I am very glad to have found a religion that both satisfies one's reason and shows one the way out from the ills of the flesh.

When I realize how different my life and my entire outlook on life have become since I have been interested in Christian Science, then I feel as though words were not adequate with which to express my gratitude. A year ago, I was in the midst of two struggles,—battling for the life of my child and fighting for the light of my eyes. Relying only on material aid and hampered by an overabundance of fear and selfish love, I lost the first battle—my baby died. It was then I began to defy God and man. I was convinced I believed in neither, and I did not seem to care what happened to my eyes. It was just at this time that I was brought in contact with several Christian Scientists, and their sweet confidence and faith awoke in me a new hope—the hope of a good God. Finally one day I was told by the specialist under whose care I had been that there was very little hope, and my foe, blindness, was gaining the upper hand; then I knew that the time had come when I would prove God's goodness to be or not to be,—and I did.

That day I went directly from the specialist to a practitioner and received a treatment. To me it was a wonderful miracle, when after the third treatment I casually glanced at a newspaper and found that, without any effort, I could read any part of it, while for over a year I had been unable even to decipher the headlines. Since then other physical troubles which had been the despair of my family and the puzzle of several physicans have been easily and permanently overcome, as also have feelings of bitterness and resentment. My one hope is that I may so live as to reflect truly that God who is Love. I am indeed grateful.

I wish to express gratitude for Christian Science and for what it has done for me. I have been healed of the need for wearing glasses which I had been told I should wear constantly. With the help of a practitioner this trouble was overcome in a very short time and I am most grateful for the help so lovingly given. Numerous other inharmonious conditions have been overcome, sometimes with the help of a practitioner, sometimes by the understanding I have gained through the study of the Bible and our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy. I am grateful to God and to our beloved Leader for this beautiful truth.—(Miss) Cena Banks, Oklahoma City, Okla.

It was the beautiful character, so full of love and good deeds, of one of its adherents that first attracted my attention to Christian Science. I remember remarking about the mental sunshine in which she consciously and constantly lived, and perhaps my voice expressed a hope that the same joyous and happy experience might be mine; be that as it may, she very graciously lent me a copy of the textbook and from the study of its pages, so replete with the highest idealism extant, I found at last the fruition of hopes long cherished for a deeper and more expansive knowledge of the truth which Jesus says will make us free. When this revelation of the truth, as given in the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, was presented to me I was a communicant of the Episcopal church of England, fully in sympathy with its teachings. Now Christian Science means everything to me; it has been my guide through all the varied vicissitudes of my life since my acceptance of its teachings about twelve years ago; it has entirely changed my outlook upon men (whom I now see as my brothers, children of the one Father), things, circumstances, and conditions. Now I realize that life, with all its seeming complexities, is not an unsolvable problem, an enigma too intricate to admit of solution. Christian Science proved itself to be a chart which any tired, storm tossed mariner on life's uncertain sea can safely rely upon. This chart founded on Truth never fails—there is always light in the darkness.

Christian Science has met my every need time and time again. Space would not allow me to enumerate the many proofs of its redemptive, healing, sustaining, and protective power, but there is one demonstration which stands out preeminently in my memory. It was the first proof I had of what Truth can do. Probably fifteen years before coming into a knowledge of Christian Science I seemingly had two very firmly intrenched habits, drinking and smoking, which under the old thought were quite permissible and occasioned me no misgivings, but after embracing the truth as revealed in Christian Science and being attracted by the beauty of its teachings, the statement on page 454 of Science and Health, "It need not be added that the use of tobacco and intoxicating drinks is not in harmony with Christian Science," gave me no little mental uneasiness. A practitioner happened to be passing through the South American town I was then living in, and I thought to ask her aid, but later decided to let Truth be my practitioner and remove in its own time and manner the landmarks of the Egypt I was leaving and assist me in my journey to the Canaan of new hopes and aspirations. So not giving any further thought to the matter I continued attending the simple services held in a private drawing-room (in marked contrast to the gorgeous ceremonial services to which I had so long been accustomed) and steadily reading Science and Health. In about six months' time, without any effort of suppression or denial on my part, both these long-standing habits most easily and gracefully left me. I might add that some years previously when requested by an oculist to give up or seriously reduce my daily allowance of alcohol and tobacco I experienced great difficulty in partially acceding to his wish, notwithstanding the fact that nicotine was supposedly very injurious to my sight.

Truth works graciously and without effort, and its power to heal, bless, and sustain was my one support when I was called upon to pass "through the valley of the shadow," my Gethsemane. How comforting then to my sorrowing sense was our Leader's interpretation, "Patient woe; the human yielding to the divine; love meeting no response, but still remaining love" (Science and Health, p. 586). When I had to pass through the most trying ordeal of my life, the passing away of my companion for long years, it was then I realized "there is no death—'tis but a seeming."

This testimony would be incomplete if I failed to express my thanks to God, to our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, who through ill or good report faithfully persevered, fought a good fight, magnificently overcoming all obstacles, enduring with undaunted courage all persecutions, through all of which she came out victorious, and out of her great loving heart bequeathed to poor tired humanity a way of escape from its self-imposed burdens, as revealed in her inspired writings.—JOSEPH H. FARADAY, San Francisco, Calif.

It is with a heart full of gratitude that I send this testimony, hoping it may be a message of love to some of God's children. Christian Science has brought many blessings to me. I have had healings of many ailments, including typhoid fever, throat trouble, weak lungs, pneumonia, and numerous healings of cuts and burns. I can say, Whereas I was sick, now I am well; whereas I was weak, now I am strong; whereas I was in doubt, now I believe that God is Love, and ever present. Christian Science corrected many false beliefs about sickness, food, weather, and—greatest of all—about God and His love to man. I remember as a child seeing on the wall of the church, in gilt letters, "In God we trust," but I never knew the meaning of those words until I had studied Christian Science. I am grateful for all the activities of our church, for the privilege of teaching in the Sunday school, and I pray I may express my gratitude for our Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, by demonstrating each day that Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus."

MRS. R. H. RICHARDSON, Kansas City, Mo.

In my earlier experience in the application of Christian Science I had what was to me a very beautiful demonstration of the healing influence of Mrs. Eddy's poems, as set to music. I was engaged in the development of some mining property and was digging a ditch along a steep and rocky hillside to lead water from a creek to a point below, where the water was used as power to run a hydraulic elevator. First the dirt and loose stone were dug away, leaving the more solid rock exposed to be broken out later on, by the use of giant powder. Prior to this time, in my experience in handling this explosive a very severe headache had always resulted, a common complaint with those who use this substance, and known as "giant powder headache." I tried to overcome the fear but it seemed so real and well rooted that soon I was in a condition where I might have voiced Job's complaint, "The thing which I greatly feared is come upon me." I sat down on the ditch bank and tried to overcome the error but it got more severe. At this time I was committing to memory our Communion hymn as written by our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, and had been rehearsing it on my way to work. With an apparent sense of desperation I dropped the treatment and resumed the rehearsing (Poems, p. 75), > Saw ye my Saviour?

> Heard ye the glad sound?
> Felt ye the power of the Word?

and to my joy the demonstration was made.

In conclusion I wish to express my love and gratitude for a Leader whose life and teaching are so pure and uplifting that as we make them our own we are made free from our fears and sufferings. Although strong and hardy throughout my life yet have I found Christian Science always practical and at hand and I am grateful indeed for the merciful God who has been revealed to me.

Signs of the Times

[Forbes]

Success is finding, or making, that position which enables you to contribute to the world the very greatest service of which you are capable through the diligent, persevering, resolute cultivation of all the faculties God has endowed you with, and doing it all with cheerfulness, scorning to allow difficulties or defeats to drive you to pessimism or despair.

It is a reflection upon the business world that success in business heretofore has been measured not so much by what a man has accomplished as by the amount of money he has accumulated, whereas in other walks of life success is measured according to what a man has achieved.

It is coming to be recognized among modern business leaders that the rolling up of a gigantic fortune no longer is accepted as success unless the process has been accompanied by service of commensurate value to mankind.

Happily, as already said, many modern leaders in business now feel that the mere piling up of millions is not the highest goal in business, but that the supreme purpose of any business must be to render a service equal to the price charged for it, and that the business man or business enterprise which aspires to win the highest recognition for success must distinguish himself or itself, not by the magnitude of the profits, but by the value of the service performed.

Organized religion suffers from accretion of dogma. The formulas which have resulted from past controversies cling to it and hamper its activities. For it must be evident that essential Christianity expresses itself in activity. Love to one's fellow leads one to seek him out and communicate of one's best. Steadfastness in following one's ideal means battling to subdue the lusts of the flesh and to resist the temptations which the world presents in such abundance. So far as the church brings other objects before its members, it suffers from defect as well as by excess. And that it does so suffer must be plain to any one who studies the social movements of our own time. For these movements show that the organizing power of religion is manifesting itself outside the churches.

[Angus Stewart Woodburne, Ph. D., in The Biblical World]

One of the results of the participation of so many religious workers in welfare activities is a growing consciousness that the time has come for the church to assume a more positive attitude toward current problems and movements. The idea that it is the sole business of the preacher to preach a "simple gospel," and avoid all matters not strictly religious, is fast passing away. Nevertheless it still happens occasionally that when one dares raise his voice in behalf of cleaner politics, improved sanitation, better housing conditions, or any other public welfare, somebody is ready to advise him to keep to his own back yard, and preach the simple gospel. If our religion be the redeeming force that we claim, none of us should be turned aside by such intimidation. The day is upon us when the Christian forces must make positive contributions to such problems, or be brushed aside as negligible factors in the community life. The necessity is twofold,—namely, for the preservation of our idealism of which the church has been the doughty defender of the past, and for the sake of the church itself, the very existence of which is threatened if its redemptive influence be not applied to current problems.

Orders for, and correspondence relating to, the publications announced herein should be addressed to The Christian Science Publishing Society, Boston 17, U.S.A.

From the Clerk of The Mother Church

Church Tenets.—The tenets of The First Church of Christ, Scientist,—The Mother Church,—printed on folded sheet for use of the branch Churches of Christ, Scientist, with space for printing their authorized forms of application for membership or extracts from their by-laws, can be had at seventy-five cents a hundred. Orders will not be taken for less than one hundred and postage stamps should not be sent in payment.

Correspondence relative to the tenets or to membership with The Mother Church should be sent to Charles E. Jarvis, Clerk, 236 Huntington Avenue, Boston 17, Massachusetts.

From the Church Treasurer

Per Capita Tax.—The annual per capita tax for which the Manual provides is due from members of The Mother Church June 1, but may be paid at any time during the year. The per capita tax of those who unite with the church in November is reckoned from the preceding June, for that is the beginning of the church year. If a remittance for church dues exceeds the amount required to balance one's account, the surplus will be credited for the current year, unless otherwise directed by the sender.

Please remit by postal or express money order, bank draft, or check. Do not send paper money through the mail unless registered.

Please advise promptly of any change in name or address.

Per capita taxes and contributions to the Real Estate Fund and to The Christian Science Benevolent Association Fund should be sent to Edward L. Ripley, Treasurer, 236 Huntington Avenue, Boston 17, Massachusetts.

Letters of Appreciation

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. Extracts from such letters follow:

I AM deeply grateful for an awakening interest in humanity that has come about in my consciousness through the reading of our daily newspaper, THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR.

ALLOW me to say a word in praise of your paper. I am not a Scientist and so my opinion is not prejudiced on account of faith. Of all the papers I have ever seen in this country, THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR has the finest and most complete world news and gives the highest class service of general interest in the United States.

I CANNOT do without THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR. Its name indicates perfectly what it is in human affairs. And I need its clear, impersonal statements.

OF all daily newspapers I feel that THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR is making the most helpful and complete contribution to the solution of the important problem of acquainting the public with the true status of education in this country.

"What I say unto you I say unto all, WATCH." Jesus

VOLUME XXII AUGUST 7, 1920 NUMBER 49

True Prayer

MOLLIE A. HOWE

WHEN Paul wrote, in his first letter to the Thessalonians, "Pray without ceasing," and prefaced this admonition with the words, "Rejoice evermore," following it with, "In every thing give thanks," one can readily see that the writer of this epistle recognized joy and gratitude as essential to true prayer, and these two qualities are so linked together as to make it difficult to find where the one ends, and the other begins, in attempting to differentiate. In the fourth chapter of Philippians we find the apostle again coupling rejoicing and thanksgiving with prayer; for he says, "Rejoice in the Lord alway: and again I say, Rejoice. . . . Be careful for nothing; but in every thing by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God."

Now the student of Christian Science knows that true prayer can and should be expressed constantly, whether he is going about his daily business affairs, or pondering the things of Spirit in his study of the Bible and the writings of Mrs. Eddy. And just in proportion as he consistently exchanges the human, or material, sense of things for the divine idea,—in other words, that which really exists as consciousness manifest,—just in that proportion will he find his prayer answered. Thus, for instance, that which has suggested itself as a lack or need, may be shown after all to be but the mist of false belief, which is always dispelled before the presence of light or spiritual understanding, proving the unreality of the former and the consequent reality of the latter. This brings us again to Paul's insight into the things of Spirit, for he says in I Corinthians, "All things are yours," and this recognition of God's allness expressed as His infinite idea is far more than the answer to mere petition.

Now in the awakening to the fact that prayer without ceasing is the true experience of the earnest student of Christian Science, one may ask: Does it follow that one can just as constantly and consistently be joyous in the face of perhaps frequent difficulties and struggles, as he can when things are apparently running smoothly? The answer must always be in the affirmative, for just in the proportion that we correct each thought that asserts itself as lack of good in any direction, with the fact of the infinitude of good in this same direction, just in this proportion are we going to recognize the quality of joy as existing in the place where the error of thought seemed to be. Again we have the Scripture for this in Nehemiah, "The joy of the Lord is your strength," as a reminder that the only Mind there is knows nothing but joy all the time, while erroneous sense can only obscure this fact through false belief.

One should grasp his privilege of knowing that, in the face of the most trying conditions and circumstances—let them seem to be want, injustice, opposition, or sorrow—there is only the truth about that condition (although at first it may be difficult to comprehend that fact), which brings with it its corresponding joy that was there all the time, even though one did not see it, and when once he does see this unfold in his experience he will have gained a point in progress he can never lose, for retrogression is impossible in Christian Science. Mrs. Eddy tells us on page 149 of Miscellany, "Remember, thou canst be brought into no condition, be it ever so severe, where Love has not been before thee and where its tender lesson is not awaiting thee. Therefore despair not nor murmur, for that which seeketh to save, to heal, and to deliver, will guide thee, if thou seekest this guidance."

One's first effort to prove this rule may be accompanied by many suggestions of doubt and defeat, and, like the child taking his first steps, the tumbles may seem for a time to be discouraging, but if he persists in steadfastly holding on, he is bound to prove that, as Mrs. Eddy says in Science and Health (p. 380): "Truth is always the victor. Sickness and sin fall by their own weight. Truth is the rock of ages, the headstone of the corner, 'but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder.'" With each proof he lessens the seeming power of evil, consequently banishing to a degree at least the mental condition or darkness that insistently argues for its own false existence.

Now to the one who has not experienced the joy of conquest and victory in proving the nothingness of evil and its claims, by discovering the truth about God and man, the question may arise, "Why do I have so much to meet?" As a student in mathematics has to demonstrate each step in the science of numbers before he can make a practical use of it, or claim it as his own, just so in Christian Science is the student forced to prove every inch of the way of the Science of being, and step by step through the unfoldment of the omnipresence of good will he learn that there is nothing too hard for Truth. Here, too, will be his opportunity to awaken to the joy of conquest in the true sense of the word; for Webster tells us that conquest is "the act or process of conquering," "act of gaining by struggle." Many a soldier in this recent war has recounted with gratitude his experiences in camp as well as at the front where he was forced (perhaps as never before) to test the efficacy of true prayer—prayer which is not necessarily expressed in words but which is the acknowledgment of God's omnipresence and allness.

On page 568 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy gives as a marginal heading, "Pæan of jubilee," to that wonderful paragraph in which she sums up the metaphysical meaning of the passage in Revelation so pregnant with meaning to the one who has conscientiously struggled with the problems that confront every earnest seeker for Truth. In this paragraph she says, "For victory over a single sin, we give thanks and magnify the Lord of Hosts. What shall we say of the mighty conquest over all sin? A louder song, sweeter than has ever before reached high heaven, now rises clearer and nearer to the great heart of Christ; for the accuser is not there, and Love sends forth her primal and everlasting strain."

Persistence

LESLIE M. KNAPP

WHAT a wonderful thing Christian Science is to the person who, befogged in sin, worried over financial difficulties, disappointed in the failure to find joy and peace in some human relationship, or clogged by the pain and weariness of some belief of physical ill, hears the joyous message of divine Love and the good which it brings to all the world, in the inspired words of Mary Baker Eddy: "The notion that both evil and good are real is a delusion of material sense, which Science annihilates. Evil is nothing, no thing, mind, nor power" (Science and Health, p. 330). When the joyous realization of what all this means—release from pain, release from sorrow, release from fear and worry—brings the happy knowledge that good alone is the only real experience that the children of God can ever have; when we learn that there is a way out, and a sure way out, of all our difficulties, we look upon a new world, a larger world, a brighter world. Enthusiasm for Christian Science, desire to master quickly this knowledge of God's laws which enables one not only to solve his own problems but to usher happiness and harmony into the lives of others, must abound.

We soon learn in Christian Science, however, that it requires work and patience to keep permanently this joyous conception of the wonderfulness of God's goodness, for mortal mind seems always busy endeavoring to suggest material concepts of life and being. Sometimes, too, when a beginner's problem seems difficult and its perfect solving does not appear instantaneous, discouragement may creep in, and for a while a mighty struggle against doubt and failure may take place. This is the testing time to the student of Christian Science. To understand God's law and to make the demonstration thereof is not a work to be haltingly undertaken. True demonstration requires a steady, persistent knowing, the deep, ever immanent prayer of Truth, which will yield not one inch to error, let error assume what proportion it may. In this struggle, in which the victory must rest on the side of invincible Truth, we are encouraged when we remember the words of Mrs. Eddy (Science and Health, p. 22): "If your endeavors are beset by fearful odds, and you receive no present reward, go not back to error, nor become a sluggard in the race. When the smoke of battle clears away, you will discern the good you have done, and receive according to your deserving. Love is not hasty to deliver us from temptation, for Love means that we shall be tried and purified."

After all, there is no real difficulty in overcoming any condition which the beginner meets, whether it be discouragement, fear of lack of understanding, belief in sickness, or any other suggestion of discord. Then is the time to cling more steadfastly to the simple teaching of Christian Science—that God is good, that He is Love, that He never made sin, sickness, or lack; that He is the Father and the Mother of all; that divine Love is so infinite that men's thought cannot compass it, and that in the full warmth and affluence of this Love there is no such thing as discord. Then, through one's knowing that this Love is ever present, the thought of discouragement will flee away; perhaps instantaneously a demonstration is made, and the discord, no matter what its name and nature, vanishes into its native nothingness. Then indeed do we begin to realize what our revered Leader meant by the sentence previously quoted, "The notion that both evil and good are real is a delusion of material sense, which Science annihilates."

The beginner in Christian Science needs to possess patience and persistence, and must know at all times that there is no condition of mortal seeming which will not yield, immediately or eventually, to Christian Science treatment. In reality, of course, there is no discordant condition to be treated, for in God's kingdom—and His kingdom is infinite and all and everywhere—there is no discord. Patience and persistence in replacing every kind of suggestion of evil with this God-inspired understanding, will result in the final overthrow of all error and hasten the coming of that day when "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 462): "Whoever would demonstrate the healing of Christian Science must abide strictly by its rules, heed every statement, and advance from the rudiments laid down. There is nothing difficult nor toilsome in this task, when the way is pointed out; but self-denial, sincerity, Christianity, and persistence alone win the prize, as they usually do in every department of life."

A Glimpse of Truth

LEWIS C. STRANG

AGAIN and again, when battling with the claims of finite sense—the suggestions of physical or mental inharmony and lack—the student of Christian Science is tempted to cry out for more of the truth to help him in his time of need. This cry is to be expected when finite sense seems dominant, for finite sense cannot know the infinite and must multiply the burdens of materiality in a vain effort to comprehend that which is for it incomprehensible. Yet it is not more of the truth—more of the ever present—that the demonstrator of Christian Science really needs, even though he lend his lips to the despairing call of finite sense. What is actually needed is a quality not a quantity—just a glimpse of the truth—and healing inevitably follows.

When one strikes a note on the piano, the note struck is found to have corresponding tones which sound with it, if the ear is well enough trained to hear them. Those tones of a higher pitch are called overtones and those of a lower undertones. With the low notes on the piano it is quite easy to hear the overtones and the undertones; as one goes higher in pitch, the overtones apparently cannot be heard, though the undertones will persist. When one gets very high in pitch, both the overtones and the undertones seem lost. Yet the overtones and undertones are there just the same. Every tone in the whole gamut of tone has its overtones and its undertones. They are always sounded, though they may not always be heard by the physical ear. Furthermore, the overtone of the note sounded also has its overtones and undertones, and the undertone has its overtones and undertones, and so on ad infinitum. Consequently, though only a single note on the piano may be struck, actually when that one note is sounded the whole infinite range of tone is brought into expression. This is really so; the only reason we do not recognize that it is so is because our limited sense of hearing does not enable us to hear the tones that actually are sounded.

When we catch a glimpse of Truth, we sound a single note in the great gamut of being. That glimpse of Truth has its overtones and its undertones, which in turn have their overtones and undertones, and so on, through the whole infinitude of Truth. Therefore our single glimpse of Truth is in reality the perception, the expression of all Truth that ever was, that is now, and that ever can be. The only reason that we call this sense of Truth "a glimpse of Truth," is because we are limited in our perception, but Truth is not limited by our perception of it,—its nature of omnipotence, omniscience, omnipresence, infinitude, remains unchanged. Therefore our glimpse of Truth is really Truth perceived, and as the perception enlarges, the glimpse of Truth must become the fullness of Truth made manifest in our experience. It is because this fact is so thoroughly demonstrated in human affairs that Mrs. Eddy's statement (Science and Health, p. 49) is profoundly true: "A grain of Christian Science does wonders for mortals, so omnipotent is Truth, but more of Christian Science must be gained in order to continue in well doing."

One Standard

JESSIE L. REMINGTON

THE student of Christian Science early learns that thought is turning in new directions, is seeking new channels for expression. Old standards are found to be tottering. Possibly existence seems at times to express itself in one great interrogation point; one may frequently find one's self asking, Why? For each individual there is the answer, which comes not from without but from within. Since this answer must come from within, none can advise or prophesy for another; but each can help his brother in the way that wisdom teaches. As there is always some one to help, there is always the opportunity to point to the Mind of Christ as our unalterable standard.

The human mind, in its ignorance, sets up itself as a standard. To be sure, it is often ethical in its requirements and frequently soars to heights which it thinks approaches the spiritual, but never attains thereto; for Spirit is not a state to be reached,—it is always at hand. When conforming to mortal mind, we find there are as many standards as there are persons, each differing from the other according to the mental status of the person. There are often attempts at honesty, but these, because of mistaken standards, may be untrue. For example: A man may believe he is judging righteous judgment when he commiserates instead of criticizing another. Neither course is right. Obviously criticism, when used as it is ordinarily, in a destructive sense, is cruel even from certain human standpoints, while commiseration argues thus: He shall not suffer criticism from me; I have only pity for him, since I might do no better, nor as well, under like conditions. This line of thought sets up a false standard. The one pitied, in his individuality—which is his real self—is as free as is God, his Father-Mother, and the knowing of this intelligently helps to heal him and ourselves from the belief that there is a cause for pity. True pity is akin to love; for compassion destroys evil in all its forms.

Mrs. Eddy says, "Mortal mind is a myth; the one Mind is immortal" (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 82). Human experience, therefore, is a dream. Do we really desire to enthrone a myth or a dream,—to worship them, to trust them with our prayers? To look away from such as these into spiritual good, is to look to that which is real. It is well to remember that divine law operates normally. We are constantly having proofs of this, even in the seemingly little occurrences of the daily routine. So simple are they and so often in orderly arrangement, that unthinkingly we are tempted to take them all for granted. Christ Jesus said, "I am the way;" and this way, in its operation of divine law, lifts up the perfect standard, than which there is in reality no other.

The constant metaphysical thinking done by those who are learning to understand God's law, is bound to leaven human thought. Many are blessed thereby, not knowing whence the blessing comes; for, as Mrs. Eddy tells us on page 206 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," "in the scientific relation of God to man, we find that whatever blesses one blesses all, as Jesus showed with the loaves and the fishes,—Spirit, not matter, being the source of supply." What a help is this knowledge in breaking the fetters of envy, malice, jealousy, and competition, and in teaching us to know that all are God's.

Thus is the standard of the world being raised; not that God is changing, for He is "the same yesterday, and to day, and for ever;" nor is man changing, for as God's image and likeness he is capable only of perfection; neither is mortal mind becoming gradually good. This is impossible, for mortal mind is acquainted only with itself and its phases; but thought is turning toward Principle and its standard, the human footsteps taken show the guidance of Truth, which inevitably dooms mortality to destruction.

Steadfastness

MABEL ERNST

WHEN the light of Truth first appears midst the chaotic beliefs of mortal mind, the individual feels as if he were inhabiting another world; the old false beliefs and fears begin to drop away, one by one, and all things become new. As the student realizes that he lives and moves and has his being in Mind, instead of in matter, he spontaneously gives utterance to the language of Spirit and finds that he can, as Mrs. Eddy says in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 418), "speak the truth to every form of error."

It happens not infrequently that our very first glimpse of Truth raises us from the depths of darkness and despair, but afterwards we are obliged patiently to go over the entire groundwork of human experience, in order that we may uproot every seed which error has sown, and be wholly free. This is when discouragement would try to thrust itself upon us if we would let it; but we know that a student of mathematics does not become discouraged when he is required to solve one difficult problem after another, because he knows that each problem correctly solved increases his proficiency in mathematics; likewise the student of Christian Science does not become tired and discouraged when his problems become more difficult and require a firmer and more steadfast allegiance to Principle, because he knows that each problem, solved through absolute reliance upon Principle, hastens the day when he will be able to solve every problem in human experience through divine metaphysics.

In "Miscellaneous Writings," Mrs. Eddy says (p. 340): "There is no excellence without labor; and the time to work is now. Only by persistent, unremitting, straightforward toil; by turning neither to the right nor to the left, seeking no other pursuit or pleasure than that which cometh from God, can you win and wear the crown of the faithful." Continuing further, on the same page she also says: "The lives of great men and women are miracles of patience and perseverance. Every luminary in the constellation of human greatness, like the stars, comes out in the darkness to shine with the reflected light of God."

One of the blessings which the writer has derived from this steadfastness of thought is the understanding that all of the good which divine Love gives us is ours for all eternity; therefore we can never be deprived of it by any erroneous belief of evil. If error tries to suggest to us that the belief of death has deprived us of some of our dear ones, by turning persistently to the truth we learn that we have not really lost them at all, but have only lost the false human concept of them; and the Godlike quality, which is all that we ever really loved, is still ours to love, and will live on in the one true consciousness throughout all eternity.

The same truth can be applied when those whom we love seem to be living away from us, and, indeed, when any false belief of human limitation tries to separate us from God. We have this assurance from Paul: "For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

"Be still"

KATE I. MAC LAREN

AT the present time, when this material world seems so full of trouble and unrest, it is good to remember the words of the "sweet psalmist of Israel," "Be still, and know that I am God." When we begin really to "be still" and consider all that this means, the thought is stupendous. "Canst thou by searching find out God?" How can we know the All? How can a mortal understand the infinite?

In speaking of God, Mrs. Eddy tells us in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 275), "No wisdom is wise but His wisdom; no truth is true, no love is lovely, no life is Life but the divine; no good is, but the good God bestows."

In order to know God, we must turn away from mortal, material concepts and human beliefs. Material knowledge is not wisdom. We read in the book of Ecclesiastes of "a poor wise man" who "by his wisdom delivered the city," when it was besieged by a materially powerful enemy. This wisdom was not the "wisdom of this world," nor was it culled from learned books or gained from professors. This wisdom was the wisdom spoken of by the wise king as being "more precious than rubies," and "more to be desired than gold." It was understanding,—that understanding which recognizes God, good, as the only power and protector of man.

Jesus promised that "the pure in heart" should "see [understand] God." To understand God as Truth, frees us from all fear, worry, and sickness, and reveals man as the perfect idea of God.

The "love" which is "lovely," is the love spoken of by Mrs. Eddy on page 17 of Science and Health, where she says, "And Love is reflected in love." Love is only lovely when it is the reflection of divine Love, which heals and saves, which comforts and forgives. Our human sense of love is sometimes more akin to hate than Love, in that it includes the element of fear, which injures those whom it desires to protect and bless, and which is the very antithesis of divine Love, which casts out fear. If we really spent our lives in reflecting Love, we should have no time for fault-finding; indeed, if we only loved enough there would be no faults left to find, for they would have melted away because, as Mrs. Eddy says in Science and Health (p. 224), "no power can withstand divine Love."

Love is Life, therefore if we understand Love, we understand Life and we know that all that is lovely, all that is true, must express Life, and can never die nor be destroyed. Now God Himself bestows this understanding of Him. It is this understanding of God as divine Principle which made Jesus entirely independent of all material means of existence. It enabled him to heal the sick, raise the dead, walk on the water, and feed the multitudes. Jesus left us the command, "Go, and do thou likewise" and this becomes possible when we remember that as Mrs. Eddy writes on page 494 of Science and Health, "It is not well to imagine that Jesus demonstrated the divine power to heal only for a select number or for a limited period of time, since to all mankind and in every hour, divine Love supplies all good."

God and Idea

ROSE MAUDE KEELER

IN "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" speaking of the chapter entitled "Recapitulation" (p. 465), Mrs. Eddy says, "Absolute Christian Science pervades its statements, to elucidate scientific metaphysics." She further states on this page, "Principle and its idea is one, and this one is God, omnipotent, omniscient, and omnipresent Being, and His reflection is man and the universe." From this absolute statement we are confronted with the oneness of God and His idea, of the indissoluble unity which Christ Jesus exemplified throughout his earthly career. Jesus never failed to turn the thought of the disciples to this fact: "I and my Father are one." In other words, he demonstrated man's oneness with the Father.

The spiritual idea, then, originates in Spirit, God. Thus idea cannot be separated from its cause, because God and His idea is one. Paul says in the eighth chapter of Romans, "For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God." Then man's union with Principle is indissoluble. Infinite Principle has its expression in infinite idea. Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 258), "God expresses in man the infinite idea forever developing itself, broadening and rising higher and higher from a boundless basis." The true man is the active manifestation of this boundless, limitless One.

It is a great thing to begin to know something about God and idea, to find that as the sun's ray is to the sun so is man to God—inseparable from Him. Though the mists of so-called material sense may seem to hide the sun, yet there it is—untouched, shining in its resplendent glory. So humanity learns that man is the pure reflection of Mind. Then comes the question, How do I know this? I know it because I am conscious of my own existence. I am conscious of living, and Life is God. To be conscious is to be intelligent, to be intelligent is to be active. Thus from this reasoning we deduce conscious, intelligent activity.

This line of reasoning does not come from the testimony of the so-called material senses, but it does come from the conscious and continued capacity to understand the infinite One. To be able to prove this every moment is surely something to be grateful for. What a wonderful inspiration to nerve endeavor, to stimulate activity.

Through Christian Science the world is learning that there is only one consciousness, one Mind, one intelligence governing completely the infinite idea. As Mrs. Eddy says in "Unity of Good" (p. 3): "God is All-in-all. Hence He is in Himself only, in His own nature and character, and is perfect being, or consciousness. He is all the Life and Mind there is or can be. Within Himself is every embodiment of Life and Mind." The divine Mind, which is All-in-all, cannot be conscious of anything unlike Himself, nor can man, the image and likeness of God, be conscious of anything unlike God, or good. The human concept is but a false belief, just the lie about God's idea. This so-called man is not the reflection of infinite Mind, and is therefore wholly without intelligence. Strictly speaking, there is no mortal mind, for Mind is immortal. So man can never be conscious of sin, sickness, death, or limitation of any kind.

We have but to deny the mortal sense and to practice being rightly conscious for the present single moment to find God and His idea perfect and harmonious, and that which comes claiming to be consciousness must have the searchlight of Truth turned upon it to find whether it is or is not. In the words of one of our hymns (Hymnal, p. 103):—

Imposture shrinks from light,
And dreads the piercing eye;
But sacred truths the test invite,
They bid us search and try.

The Valley of Decision

FANNY DE GROOT HASTINGS

THOSE uninstructed by Christian Science may spend most of their seemingly perplexed existence in the "valley of decision," so named by the prophet Joel in his exclamation: "Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision: for the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision." Even if one is sincere in his desire to follow the right course, he often strays and reaps the consequent misery, or fails to act at all, for he has no positive knowledge of Principle with which to work.

The Christian Scientist, on the other hand, though he may find himself in the valley of decision many times a day in his journey out of materiality, has an unfailing guide. He is learning through precept and practice to lift his thought above error, the conflicting arguments of mortal mind that would suggest confusion, and in the rarefied atmosphere of spiritual consciousness to listen and hear the divine commands. He no longer seeks personal opinions and advice, for he rejoices in the knowledge that, as Mrs. Eddy writes (Message for 1901, p. 20), "the Christian Scientist is alone with his own being and with the reality of things," and that in the blessed solitude of his own uplifted consciousness the angels of God's presence will come and minister to his needs.

When the light of Christian Science dawns, there comes to man the realization that he does not have to take the long road, the steep and stony road, the prodigal's road; in proportion to the wholeness of his heart, the cleanness of his hands, and the sureness of his understanding he can walk the broad highway of Spirit. Obedience, the willingness to lay down the baggage of materiality that one may be free to follow where Truth leads, is the signpost in the valley of decision that points the way to heaven. In "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 117) Mrs. Eddy gives this admonition to students of Christian Science: "Be sure that God directs your way; then, hasten to follow under every circumstance."

Love's Guidance

EMELIE J. BEERS

AT night the listening shepherds
Heard the tidings, glad and clear;
And at night the watching wise men
Saw the guiding star appear.

Though to sense the night is darkest,
Truth still speaks, Love leads the way;
If we follow, it will guide us
Out of darkness to God's day.

Selected Articles

["The Only Love"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U. S. A., May 6, 1920]

Love is Mind's potent provision of abounding good for its image and likeness. That is, love in the sense of loving. Mind, of course, is Love, the All-power that expresses itself in constant and exclusive unfoldment of good. Mind never brings forth evil, because it is eternal, and destructive elements of evil could never be contained in what is everlasting, because destructibility and indestructibility do not mix. In "Unity of Good" Mrs. Eddy's statement of this point is found on page 17: "Error says God must know evil because He knows all things; but Holy Writ declares God told our first parents that in the day when they should partake of the fruit of evil, they must surely die. Would it not absurdly follow that God must perish, if He knows evil and evil necessarily leads to extinction? Rather let us think of God as saying, I am infinite good; therefore I know not evil. Dwelling in light, I can see only the brightness of My own glory."

It is well to know these facts, in order to love rightly, and in order to escape from hatred of any person or thing. Repeatedly in the Bible and in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" there is found the urging to "love your enemies." To hate is not scientific, because it is a belief that there is more than all there is, namely, the all-power that expresses itself in constantly unfolding good. Nor is it Christian; and as authority for this, there is the statement of Christ Jesus, whose words and works are the basis for all that is Christian: "But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you. . . . For if ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? do not even the publicans the same? And if ye salute your brethren only, what do ye more than others? do not even the publicans so?"

It is usually easy enough for a person to have a human liking for those who are in agreement with him, who do what he wishes, though even this may grow irksome, since mortal whims and fluctuations carry the human sense of love hither and thither. There is only one absolute basis for loving, and that is Principle. That statement makes it obvious that such affection has nothing in common with mere so-called loving that finds its outlet through the five material senses. Knowing that divine Love and its potent manifestation is all there is, not only enables one to love those who are friendly to him, but to have settled good will toward those as well who are supposed to dislike him. This does not mean that wrong is to be condoned in order to love one's so-called enemies. One cannot do evil that good may come. It does mean that one can know that right where enmity seems to be, there is the activity of divine consciousness. Thus one can quietly oppose a wrong, letting the unwise pass by, while still maintaining active affection for all mankind. If the whole world would turn to Principle on this basis, Principle would be universally manifest in a surprisingly short time.

It is simply impossible deliberately to hate Peter and love James, and accomplish effective healing work. It makes no difference whether one's dislike is expressed mentally, or both mentally and audibly, the guilt is the same. Likewise, it matters not how much evil Peter seems to be bringing about, the true method of helping the whole situation is to exercise love and charity from the scientific standpoint in Christian Science. And the loving is, without doubt, to the human mind a hard thing to do. It is just because it is a difficult task for this so-called mentality, that the mortal counterfeit mind prefers to go on hating. It requires metaphysical work, the turning to Principle, to Truth, to regard with kindliness the actions of a supposed enemy. But just as surely as the belief of a foe is faced by reality, the myth disappears and one no longer has an opponent so far as he himself is concerned.

The pseudo mind that is mortal, fancies that it says: "I will love James and John, but Peter—is it not apparent what wrong Peter is doing? He must be hated. It is necessary to oppose him with any and all weapons." But here this travesty called mind fails to see the logical consequence of such an attitude. Sooner or later, as experience shows, the one hating is liable to turn upon John and James, as well as Peter, because human love and hate reverse themselves frequently in a moment of time. But whether he shows enmity against one or three, he will finally discover that what he has been doing all along was simply penalizing himself, in just the way that Mrs. Eddy points out in "Miscellaneous Writings," in an article entitled "Taking Offense" (p. 223): "There is immense wisdom in the old proverb, 'He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty.' Hannah More said, 'If I wished to punish my enemy, I should make him hate somebody.'"

And on this same subject Mrs. Eddy says on page 11 of "Miscellaneous Writings:" "We must love our enemies in all the manifestations wherein and whereby we love our friends; must even try not to expose their faults, but to do them good whenever opportunity occurs. To mete out human justice to those who persecute and despitefully use one, is not leaving all retribution to God and returning blessing for cursing. If special opportunity for doing good to one's enemies occur not, one can include them in his general effort to benefit the race. Because I can do much general good to such as hate me, I do it with earnest, special care—since they permit me no other way, though with tears have I striven for it."

Could there have been, from the standpoint of the human senses, any more inimical treatment than that accorded the Master when the Jews crucified him? And yet he said, "Father, forgive them." It was just because of this method that Christ Jesus had of dealing with evil, a way further illustrated in the garden when he healed the ear of the soldier sent to capture him, that enabled him to reduce mortal mind's supreme efforts to their native nothingness and conquer the tomb itself. The Father and the Son, Principle and its expression, are one. Jesus knew this, declared it to the Jews, and demonstrated it, thus proving the Christian logic that there cannot be more than all there is—the infinite Mind and its manifestation. Hate, therefore, actually is nonexistent.

[Louis A. Gregory in Omaha (Neb.) World-Herald]

An Episcopal layman recently declared in the World-Herald that the Nicene creed is practically the constitution of orthodox Christianity, and finding that Christian Science does not accept the theory that Christ is God, stated in that creed, he jumped to the conclusion that Christian Science has no Christian basis. If both his premises were admitted, Christian Science would still have for its foundation, as actually it does have, the whole of the sacred Scriptures, the Holy Bible, for the Nicene creed is not a part of the Bible, and discussion of the relationship of that creed to Bible teaching has continued without conclusion for fifteen centuries with a vigor and persistence that no other subject has exceeded.

It may well be that the statement is correct that the Nicene creed is the constitution of various religious doctrines, but creed or belief cannot be the basis of scientific teaching, for that must rest upon absolute law. Christian Science is truly scientific and is based upon the spiritual law stated in the Bible and fully demonstrated by Christ Jesus. This law declares the infinitude and goodness of God, and the Savior showed that this law must be understood and applied, thus destroying all manner of evil, including sickness. The science of Christianity operates according to that law, overcoming sin, disease, and all evil in proof of God's allness.

When Christian Science emphasizes the desirability of going beyond mere faith to a demonstrable understanding of Christianity, it does not ignore faith, as the layman critic assumed. It does not conflict with the Pauline teaching of the importance of faith or of justification by faith, but it does show the superiority of faith in works over faith in words. The New Testament makes very clear that works without faith are just as vain as is faith without works, but that gives no ground for anxiety lest undue emphasis be placed upon works that result from an understanding of the unceasing and unlimited activity of God's power. Certainly no one has done so much as Jesus did, for most of the gospel record is occupied with the account of his good works, and probably the healing of disease is the most frequent event.

The deeds and works of the great Nazarene show that he held works in high esteem, especially healing. He always coupled the admonition to preach the gospel with the command to heal the sick as he did. He said, "By their fruits ye shall know them." In Matthew we are told that he healed the palsied man to prove, as he said, his power to destroy sin. Another time, when his healing work was criticized, he said, "If I cast out devils by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you." In harmony with such statements Christian Science holds that it is more important to appreciate the significance of spiritual healing, as proof of God's allness, than it is to recognize it as the most effective of healing methods.

[Harry K. Filler in Cincinnati (Ohio) Enquirer]

The rabbi's sermon, "The Problems of Evil," extracts of which were printed in a recent issue, takes plain issue with some Old Testament teachings on the question of God's knowing or permitting evil. He asks, "If God is all-powerful, why does He permit these things?" In the first chapter of Genesis we have the statement, "And God saw every thing that he had made, and, behold, it was very good." Elihu, in his accusation of Job for charging God with injustice, writes, "Far be it from God, that he should do wickedness; and from the Almighty, that he should commit iniquity." The distinguished Jewish prophet Habakkuk, about 610 B.C. wrote, "Thou art of purer eyes than to behold evil, and canst not look on iniquity." Jesus, the Godlike man, who taught mankind the way to God by demonstration, had to say of evil that it, the "devil" [alias evil], "is a liar, and the father of it."

Christian Science teaches exactly what the Bible teaches on the subjects of evil and suffering. The great mission Christian Science has to fulfill is to take away the sin of the world. One of the duties of every member of the Christian Science church is to pray each day (Church Manual, p. 41), "'Thy kingdom come;' let the reign of divine Truth, Life, and Love be established in me, and rule out of me all sin; and may Thy Word enrich the affections of all mankind, and govern them!"

One only becomes a Christian Scientist as one rises above the desire to sin and the tendency to believe that evil has any God-given authority or power. Evil, as a false claim, has to be reckoned with, but evil, as something that enjoys, suffers, or is real, does not exist. In her textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 460), Mrs. Eddy has to say of sickness or suffering: "Sickness is neither imaginary nor unreal,—that is, to the frightened, false sense of the patient. Sickness is more than fancy; it is solid conviction. It is therefore to be dealt with through right apprehension of the truth of being."

Christian Science goes to the bottom of evil and error, and thoroughly and scientifically destroys them. Being destroyed, they are proved unreal. The rabbi is entitled to his belief about God being the creator of evil and ills; but as I read his statement of this belief, the wholly consistent and incontestable logic of a truth uttered in the first chapter of the epistle of James clamors for utterance: "Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man: but every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed. Then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin: and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." God, who is revealed by the Bible, and whom we are learning to know and to love in Christian Science, is the infinite, ever present I AM, "with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning."

[Willis D. McKinstry in Wichita (Kan.) Beacon]

Infinite Spirit, God, divine Mind, is the fundamental basis of all true being, and the universe and man reflect Him. Christian Science is purely metaphysical, it is above the physical, it reveals a true knowledge of spiritual cause and effect. Mrs. Eddy says in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" on page 14: "Entirely separate from the belief and dream of material living, is the Life divine, revealing spiritual understanding and the consciousness of man's dominion over the whole earth. This understanding casts out error and heals the sick, and with it you can speak 'as one having authority.'"

While Christian Science cannot be defined by the shadow screen there still remains a profitable field for a better class of photo plays, such as manifest the higher ideals of human character, portraying an ethical system of morals, actions, motives, and conduct of living. Such qualities as health, happiness, joy, contentment, forgiveness, gentleness, honesty, integrity, justice, mercy, and goodness, entering into the affairs of men should be the paramount feature of every play; then as these higher and more perfect attributes of being become the ideals of the human mind, mankind will be blessed. Mrs. Eddy further says on page 234 of Science and Health, "Whatever inspires with wisdom, Truth, or Love—be it song, sermon, or Science—blesses the human family with crumbs of comfort from Christ's table, feeding the hungry and giving living waters to the thirsty."

[A. J. Chapman in The Times-Picayune, La.]

From the standpoint of Christian Science, the only true healing method is the one employed by Christ Jesus. We know that when his followers possess as much of the divine Spirit as the Master possessed, they will be able to demonstrate the same healing power that he did. If the method employed by the so-called "Miracle Man" is an exercise of the human will or the practice of hypnotism or mesmerism, then it is not the Christian Science method, but far from it.

Mrs. Eddy said on one occasion (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 97): "Erring human mind is by no means a desirable or efficacious healer. Such suppositional healing I deprecate. It is in no way allied to divine power. All human control is animal magnetism, more despicable than all other methods of treating disease. Christian Science is not a remedy of faith alone, but combines faith with understanding, through which we may touch the hem of His garment; and know that omnipotence has all power."

Christian Scientists have no quarrel with other systems of healing, nor do we criticize or condemn other systems, however much we might disagree with them. We realize that when a man is sick, he wants to be healed, and when he is benefited by any of these methods, we are glad. When the Master was performing his wonderful healings, he was condemned by those who opposed him and it was claimed that he cast out devils by Beelzebub, and to this he replied: "If I by Beelzebub cast out devils [evils] by whom do your children cast them out? therefore they shall be your judges. But if I cast out devils by the Spirit of God, then the Kingdom of God is come unto you." Perhaps the words of Jesus will better illustrate the position of Christian Scientists on this subject, for when his disciples discovered one who was not strictly a follower of Jesus casting out devils in his name, they complained to him about it in the following words: "Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name, and he followeth not us; and we forbad him, because he followeth not us;" and in reply the Master said: "Forbid him not: for there is no man which shall do a miracle in my name, that can lightly speak evil of me. For he that is not against us is on our part."

[James M. Stevens in Martin County Independent, Fairmont, Minn.]

In the paper "The Dual Personality" published in a recent issue, Christian Science is referred to in a way which is almost certain to be misleading. The authority to whom is attributable the statement that Christian Scientists heal disease "through faith and suggestion," could not have been correctly informed concerning Christian Science and its method of healing. Neither faith, as that word is commonly used and probably was intended to be used by the authority, nor suggestion enters into Christian Science healing. Christian Science healing is a restoration of primitive, spiritual healing as taught and practiced by Jesus, and in lesser degree by his disciples and by some of the ancient prophets. Christian Science healing is not faith cure; neither is it the effect of the action of the human mind upon itself or upon another human mind. It is the intelligent application of the ever present law of God. It is the utilization of spiritual understanding in contradistinction to blind belief or to human will power.

The following statements of Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science as found on pages 23 and 144 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," are illustrative of the Christian Science teaching relative to faith and suggestion: "Faith, if it be mere belief, is as a pendulum swinging between nothing and something, having no fixity. Faith, advanced to spiritual understanding, is the evidence gained from Spirit, which rebukes sin of every kind and establishes the claims of God." "Willing the sick to recover is not the metaphysical practice of Christian Science, but is sheer animal magnetism. Human will-power may infringe the rights of man. It produces evil continually, and is not a factor in the realism of being. Truth, and not corporeal will, is the divine power which says to disease, 'Peace, be still.'"

The Reign of Law

The world is suffering very largely from the belief that there is a law of evil. It is perfectly obvious that if such a law exists, it is useless and impossible to fight against it. Law, scientifically, is not an enactment which can be modified or set aside by a legislative body, or by the fiat of autocracy. It is the working of Principle, which is absolute; consequently law itself is absolute, and being absolute, cannot be escaped from. The effect of this must be not only intensely dispiriting, but absolutely crushing to anybody who believes himself under a law of evil. It is, indeed, the crushing sense of inability to escape from this which operates with such disastrous effect in the physical universe.

Almost a single example of what this means will make the whole argument clear. It is a fully accepted medical dogma that there is a law of heredity. This law of heredity works in the most remorseless fashion. It may skip a generation, it may skip two or three generations, but it is always liable again to assert itself in some horrible trait of character or manifestation of disease, which makes the person marked out for its operation a misery to himself, and perhaps a terror to mankind. A degenerate or a sick man is the complete victim of such a law. The world has been taught that it is impossible for him to escape its effects, and he bows to the world's decision, sometimes in desperation and sometimes in despair. Nor is the world which believes in the law, and which is consequently aware of the impotence of the victim in the meshes of the law, in any way fair to him. If it is merely a case of disease, it regards him with a certain amount of pity or loathing, according to the nature of the disease; if, on the other hand, it is a case of vice or criminality, it turns upon him with the anger of society, fighting for its own protection.

Now the curious part of all this is not that purely materialistic mentalities should be deceived by such a claim of law, but that a so-called Christian public should be equally deceived by it. To the man who believes that nothing exists but matter and its various manifestations, a sick man or a degenerate can only be observed and treated as a sick or a dangerous animal. The law is there, and there is no more chance of fighting the law than of preventing the revolution of the earth. It is when it comes to the so-called Christian theology that the wonder grows. For according to the teaching of the Bible, everything that ever was created, was created good, so that there is no room for evil at all. Orthodox Christian theology, faced, therefore, with the manifestation of evil, and being thoroughly materialistic in all its conceptions,—as, in spite of its theological dogmas, it must be, inasmuch as it has accepted matter as the creation of God, Principle,—has to find a way out of its dilemma, and it finds this way in the most illogical manner, by some theory of free will, predestination, or divine permission.

Such arguments are, of course, hopelessly illogical, and hopelessly unscientific. If nothing was created which is not good, then there can be no evil to which a man can be predestined; if no evil was ever made, no opportunity for the exercise of free will, in a choice between good and evil can exist; and no possibility of an infinitely good power permitting any exercise of evil can occur where no evil is. This is precisely what Mrs. Eddy saw, when the Science of Christianity first dawned upon her; and, being naturally logical, she found it impossible to accept any such argument of despair. In consequence, she wrote, on page 253 of Science and Health, "Do not believe in any supposed necessity for sin, disease, or death, knowing (as you ought to know) that God never requires obedience to a so-called material law, for no such law exists." What, of course, Mrs. Eddy was endeavoring to make clear was that no law exists but the law of God, the law of divine Principle; and that as God, Principle, is infinitely good, and has created nothing that is not good, therefore the widely advertised law of evil must be a counterfeit of law, a mere negation of law,—in short, a supposititious law.

Such a statement can, fortunately, be tested by every one for himself. It is not a dogma that has to be taken on trust, and the result left to be proved at some future time, in another phase of existence. It is an appeal to law, to absolute law, as against a so-called physical law. If the claim of hereditary evil or hereditary disease to enslave mankind be proved, even in one instance, to be untrue, it is proved that there is no such law as a law of hereditary evil or hereditary disease. When to one proof that there is no such law, there is added another proof, and ultimately hundreds and thousands of proofs, then the demands of natural science itself have been met, and met under what should be, even to the human mind, the surest of evidences, the evidence of the Aristotelian process of induction. "Christian Science," Mrs. Eddy writes, on page 461 of Science and Health, "must be accepted at this period by induction."

It must be clear from this that what dominates the human mind is a mere belief of law, and it is the business of the metaphysician to argue clearly the truth about law so as to prove the unreality of the popular conception, and, having done this, to demonstrate, by the healing of sin and disease, that no law of evil exists. If a law of evil did exist, it could never be overcome, but the moment that the supposed law is broken, it is proved immediately never to have been law, and all the fear of it is destroyed. It is the belief in law that above everything fills the human mind with fear, for the human mind realizes that it is impossible to fight against law. Now it is perfectly true that it is impossible to fight against law, but it is not only possible to fight against a false belief of law, but to overcome that false belief, and prove it to have no power at all. The importance, then, of a true understanding of law becomes easily obvious, since in this true understanding is the relief from all the terrors of a belief in the reality and power of evil. "The strength of sin," Paul wrote to the Corinthians, "is the law"—in other words, the belief in the power and reality of evil which constitutes the claim of law. "But," he went on immediately, "thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ"—for it was the teaching and demonstration of Jesus, the Christ, which explained and proved to me that there is no law but the law of God, good.

The New Earth

Earth is so often thought of as matter, as a type of gross materiality, that some may have lost sight of the fact that there must be the true idea of earth as well as of anything else. Any seeming mortal sense of things is but counterfeit of the infinite idea created and sustained by divine Mind.

Digitized by Google

There could not even seem to be a counterfeit without there being first of all the genuine. The spiritual fact is, of course, that the genuine is simply omnipresent Mind manifested. All the presence and substance there is or ever has been, divine Mind and its Idea, could not really be counterfeited, could not allow even a suppositional opposite actually to exist. The very supposition of an opposite to infinity is from its nature mere supposition of an impossibility,—in other words, utterly nothing, than which it could never be less nor more. In place of this supposititious nothingness, the divine Mind with its boundlessly varied idea is always the present and eternal verity. This Mind's substantial activity must, therefore, be all there is to the true earth, to the "new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness."

On page 585 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy defines "EARTH" as: "A sphere; a type of eternity and immortality, which are likewise without beginning or end." Then she explains even more fully: "To material sense, earth is matter; to spiritual sense, it is a compound idea." There need be no fear whatever, therefore, that anything that earth truly means or includes will ever be destroyed. The true idea is as eternal as its divine source, though necessarily quite apart from any belief in matter. The belief conceived of by a wholly suppositional mortal mind is what dissolves and leaves the perfect idea intact as what it always has been, the expression of Principle. If we substitute any other word for "earth" the same truth remains true. The divine idea is what God knows of anything, instead of the human belief.

Take, for instance, the word "summer." The summer which divine intelligence knows is the eternity of joyous fulfillment. Of the true idea, there could be neither too much nor too little. Immortal Mind is ever conscious of just the right season for all activity. This true season is not limited to any human sense of seasons but unfolds perpetually as idea, altogether separate from supposed matter. The spiritual season which is the product of Principle is exactly right in quality and tangible unfoldment. It is, of course, endlessly varied, simply because it is the effect of infinite divine consciousness. Nothing less than the one Mind, which is all the Mind there is, could possibly be conscious of this perfect season of activity, and nothing less than the one Mind could be conscious of anything else, for there is nothing else either to know or to be known. In other words, the spiritual fact is that even now the true season which God knows as perfectly satisfactory in every way is the only season of true experience. This is the joyous eternity of the true earth, as idea, not as matter.

Thus Mrs. Eddy says on page 96 of Science and Health: "Love will finally mark the hour of harmony, and spiritualization will follow, for Love is Spirit. Before error is wholly destroyed, there will be interruptions of the general material routine. Earth will become dreary and desolate, but summer and winter, seedtime and harvest (though in changed forms), will continue unto the end,—until the final spiritualization of all things." As the spiritual idea is discerned and demonstrated as the reality, illusion necessarily is proved to be void. The mortal belief called earthliness is thoroughly unsatisfactory; but in place of it there is always the true earth, the "compound idea" which is exactly right in every respect because it manifests Principle.

Whether in midsummer or in midwinter, therefore, one's work is to consider and experience the new earth in place of any false sense of things. What divine intelligence knows of heat is ever occasion for true happiness and animation. The growth that immortal Mind is conscious of is simply the unfoldment of infinity and not what is humanly called growth at all. The whole free activity of Principle, in fact, is the reality of spiritual summer. Truly, in the words of Genesis, "While the earth remaineth, seedtime and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease." The true idea of heat, however, for instance, is simply the true idea of activity, for what is humanly analyzed as heat is, after all, but a sense of activity. With the turning away from the limited mortal sense of heat or of any other belief in earthliness, to the unlimited spiritual idea, there can be only continuous enjoyment of Principle. As just so much of the human sense of anything disappears, the eternal idea, the new earth, is demonstrated as ever immanent in Mind. The new earth, then, is the only earth there truly is, and it is forever good because it is spiritual. Mrs. Eddy has explained the new earth in the light of Christian Science numerous times, and always she turns attention to infinite divine Love, which is Principle, as the source of all true manifestation. The idea which expresses the one loving, divine intelligence must always be enjoyable. As she declares in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 113): "Divine Love is our hope, strength, and shield. We have nothing to fear when Love is at the helm of thought, but everything to enjoy on earth and in heaven."

The Lectures

YAKIMA, WASH. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Mrs. Maude Weisberger, who said in part:—

Christian Science is a religion of hope and of fulfillment. It is the "On earth peace, good will toward men." The mariner, struggling upon the storm tossed sea, hails with joy the gleaming light, whose rays shine out through the dark night, guiding him safely into the harbor. So in the midst of the seeming chaos in the world to-day, Christian Science comes as a light, shining through the dark sea of materiality and woe, showing sick and sinful humanity the way to God. The world is beginning to awaken from the horrible nightmare of war and pestilence, want and woe, and to cry out for the light, for comfort, peace, and rest. Too long it has been groping in the dark, vainly seeking through creed and dogma for that which, the psalmist says, "satisfieth the longing soul, and filleth the hungry soul with goodness."

Lawton, Okla. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Mrs. Gertrude Goode, who said in part:—

Nineteen hundred years ago, there lived a man, known as Christ Jesus, who healed all manner of disease, who opened the eyes of the blind, who fed the multitude, who raised the dead, and who in fact never failed to relieve those who came to him in distress. This man of Galilee never claimed any power of his own, never claimed any power underived from God. He said, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work," "The Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works." This selfsame Jesus also said, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also;" but for many centuries after these words were spoken, it was generally believed and taught even by the Christian world that these works were supernatural or belonged to a dispensation now ended, and this false teaching did not lighten the burden of mankind, it did not bring to the weary and heavy laden peace and rest, but bound upon men's shoulders burdens grievous to be borne.

In the year 1866 the same healing truth demonstrated by Christ Jesus, was revealed to a woman, Mary Baker Eddy, through an earnest study of the Bible. Her realization of the world's great need of redemption, coupled with a fervent desire to know and do the will of God, enabled her after years of prayerful devotion, consecration, and study to point suffering humanity to the Lamb of God, to the healing Christ, the new-old truth expressed in Christian Science.

Long Beach, Calif. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by F. H. Downs, who said in part:—

Many of you are here for the first time perhaps to hear a lecture on the subject of Christian Science. You may be here prompted by curiosity only; but many of you have come to learn more about God and his healing power as taught in Christian Science. You may be suffering from sin, disease, or sorrow, from seeming lack and limitation. You may be discouraged, and the outlook is dark and foreboding. You may not know that the same law of God is operative here and now and at this very hour that was in operation and used by Jesus himself when he healed the multitudes on the shore of the Sea of Galilee. He said, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." It is this vision of the Christ as revealed through Christian Science that brings the understanding of God that heals the sick, that brings health, happiness, joy, and freedom from fear, sin, disease, and death.

Urbana, Ill. (Society, University of Illinois).—Lecturer introduced by Harold F. Cope, who said in part:—

Christian Science should be of particular interest to the college student. It is practical enough to apply to every one, from those in the most humble walks of life to those in the positions of highest importance; but still it should be of primary importance to college students, because it gives an answer to the problem which every student is seeking to solve. Students in such a university as this are in reality doing nothing more than attempting to find the truth. They are chiefly concerned with the truth about men and things. But Christian Science not only teaches the truth about men and things but also shows their relation to God. It is primarily a religion; but still it is just as much a branch of knowledge as mathematics, or chemistry, or physics, or any of the other natural sciences. Furthermore, it is an exact science; when it is applied correctly, its results are just as certain as the results in a mathematical problem; also, it is what may be called the ultimate science. Knowledge of it is the one kind of knowledge which man should seek for. The importance of this understanding was the principal point at issue in the Biblical passage: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."

Richmond, Surrey, England (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by John Reed, who said in part:—

Christian Science is a natural, simple, and practical religion; it meets all human needs; brings rest and peace to the weary; health, joy, and happiness to the sick; and heals all discordant conditions. These lectures are given in order that others may share with us the rich blessings which the study of this Science brings.

Stockholm, Sweden (Society).—Lecturer introduced by Percy Hsson Tamm, who said in part:—

When Christian Science first came in my way I shrugged my shoulders at the whole thing, believing it to be "one of the ordinary fancies of superstitious people." Years passed, until one day I came to witness an instantaneous healing through Christian Science of a very severe case of organic disease, from which a member of my family had been suffering for many years. That a healing had taken place was undeniable, but at first I thought that it must of course have been effected through will power or hypnotism of some kind or another. Nevertheless I had to promise that, if the healing proved permanent, I would study the teachings of Christian Science; and when later on, to fulfil this promise, I took up its study, it was with the intention of finding out where the fault lay; for I was firmly convinced that there was something wrong about it, but very soon I realized that instead I had found the truth.

What happened to me can happen to any one. Christian Science is offering a solution to all problems, and if we do not always succeed, the fault is not in Christian Science but in ourselves.

Silver Creek, N. Y. (Society).—Lecturer introduced by Miss Bertha Train, who said in part:—

Quite a portion of our lives is spent in seeking not only a livelihood but also pleasure. Now pleasure in the broad sense of the word is that which brings joy, peace, comfort, all that is good, into our own lives and to those with whom we associate. We know, too, from experience that joy usually follows work well done. Christian Science is applicable to our every thought and action and teaches us how to do better work and also a happier way in which to do it than most of us knew of before taking up this study.

Greensburg, Ind. (Society).—Lecturer introduced by Ralph G. Dock, who said in part:—

Christian Scientists accept the teachings of Jesus in all their simplicity, and believe that they apply to present day conditions just as well as they did to conditions existing two thousand years ago. The Bible is authority for the statement that Jesus said to his disciples of all time, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do." Therefore when he commanded his disciples—in other words, his students and followers—to go into all the world and preach the gospel, heal the sick, cleanse the leper, and raise the dead, this command was not intended for a chosen few, but was for all those followers who rose to a full understanding of his teaching of the one omnipotent, omnipresent, omniscient God or Principle which is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever.

As Christian Scientists we are preaching this gospel and we leave the world to judge the tree by its fruits.

St. Louis, Mo. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by John Ashcroft, who said in part:—

After thousands of years of effort to obtain health through material means, the world is rapidly growing weary of its lack of success, and is asking eagerly if there be not a better way. We who have had some experience in Christian Science are gratefully conscious of our debt to our Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, for having shown us such a way.

In the press and periodicals of the country may be found constant allusions to this trend of thought. Quite recently a writer in one of the mid-western denominational organs, after dwelling at considerable length on the assurance of James that "the prayer of faith shall save the sick," portrayed in heartfelt language the possibilities of divine help in the hour of need. It was quite regrettable, however, that he felt called upon to assure his hearers that what he was saying was not Christian Science; that there was nothing in the apostle's statement that precluded recourse to the best material means available.

Olympia, Wash. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Arthur W. Higgs, who said in part:—

Christian Science comes to the world-weary seeker after truth with full assurance of God's unchanging love, "the same yesterday and to day and for ever" and it confidently affirms that the Scriptural promises are as available for mankind to-day as in past ages.

This assurance is based, not on mere theory, but is the outcome of fifty years' demonstration of the Principle of Christian Science in healing the sick and reforming the sinner. So widespread has the Christian Science movement grown in a comparatively few years that skeptics admit that there "is something in it," and its healing influence is acting as an incentive to orthodox churches to obey the divine command, "Heal the sick," as well as, "Preach the gospel." Christian Science tenderly repeats the appeal of Jesus and its promise, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

Lakeland, Fla. (Society).—Lecturer introduced by Fred D. Jacobs, who said in part:—

By holding steadfastly to the true concept of man, a Christian Science practitioner is enabled to restore to a normal balance the momentarily confused consciousness of one who appears, to mortal sense, to be sick, diseased, or otherwise in a discordant state. Christian Science is precisely what its name implies: scientifically applied Christianity. It is as exact and demonstrable as mathematics. A pupil in mathematics may make a mistake in adding, subtracting, multiplying, or dividing, while working out a problem. If so, and he desires to correct it, his course is plain, and admits of no deviation. He must see his mistake, erase the wrong figures, place in their stead the right figures —and his problem is correct.

Just so is it with the man who in working out life's daily problem makes a mental error, and seems to be manifesting mortal discord in the form of sin, sickness, or disease. His course also is plain, and admits of no deviation, if he desires to be restored to harmony. He must see the error, destroy it, and place in its stead the true facts of being—and the true consciousness of being will appear.

Washington, N. C. (Society).—Lecturer introduced by Judge Stephen C. Bragaws, who said in part:—

Science is knowledge gained and verified by exact observation and correct thinking, and Christian Science then must mean knowledge of Christ, and God and of their existence by exact observation and correct thinking—not mere belief, but knowledge, such as must have been possessed by him from whose patient lips came the triumphant cry that has trumpeted down the centuries, "I know that my redeemer liveth." To have the opportunity to be led even a little nearer to the means of such knowledge is worth much—to be led into the very ways of exact observation and correct thinking which will gain for us absolute knowledge of the divine Father and our Redeemer is a journey greatly worth while.

Sierra Madre, Calif. (Society).—Lecturer introduced by Miss Christine Johnston, who said in part:—

When the children of Israel's vision of the healing and saving power of the ever present Christ was clouded by material rites and ceremonies, the voice of Truth spoke through one of their prophets saying: "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." In this age, with human consciousness asleep in the shadow of creeds and doctrines, the voice of Truth has again spoken, and that its message is being heard is evidenced by the fact that thousands of earnest men and women are turning to God as the source of health and comfort. During the past few months many orthodox churches have united in an effort to include spiritual healing in their religious activities, which convinces the student of Christian Science that the leaven of Truth is at work in the universal consciousness, destroying the prejudices of the human mind and awakening men to recognize and accept the Comforter which Jesus said the Father would send in his name.

Pietermaritzburg, Natal, South Africa (Society).—Lecturer introduced by Miss E. Murray, who said in part:—

Christian Science is the very same religion taught and practiced by Christ Jesus two thousand years ago. We believe that Jesus the Christ meant every word he said; so when he told his followers to "preach the gospel" and "heal the sick," he meant these commands to be obeyed just as much as the command to "love one another." True Christian Scientists are trying humbly and faithfully, though perhaps imperfectly yet, to obey all these commands and to present to the world a religion of love and healing.

Testimonies of Healing

As I have been helped so many times by reading the testimonies of others, I feel it my duty as well as a privilege to tell of some of the blessings that have come to me through Christian Science. I had suffered for many years from a serious internal trouble, there being a displacement which caused me constant suffering and pain. A great deal of the time it was impossible for me to be on my feet. I was constantly under the doctor's care for more than six years, and a great deal of the time for two or three years before that. Several doctors tried all kinds of treatments, but there was no permanent benefit. Besides this I suffered from a serious heart trouble. I would sink away almost into unconsciousness. Many times it seemed that I could not possibly live through the attacks, and they would leave me in a weak and helpless condition. I also suffered from periodical attacks of headache during which I could hardly lift my head off my pillow for several days at a time, and would only get over one siege when another would come on. I was under the influence of drugs most of the time, and it seemed that almost every organ of my body was affected in some way. I was gradually growing weaker and getting more helpless, until as a last resort my attending physician advised us to consult a specialist. He said that medicine would not do me any good and that he was sure that I would never be any better unless I would undergo an operation. The doctors had thought for some time that an operation might help me, but would not advise it on account of the heart trouble.

On the first day of September, 1915, my husband and sister took me to a hospital in Chicago for an examination. After making a thorough examination, followed by two weeks' treatment, the specialist very kindly told us that there was no use staying there any longer, that the operation could not be performed then as it would not be safe to give me ether. He told them to take me home until I got stronger, and then to come back.

About three weeks after returning home a dear neighbor came to our house and told us about Christian Science. She offered to lend us her copy of Science and Health. We did not know anything about Christian Science and had never heard of the textbook. At first I thought that it could not help me, but after thinking about it for a few days I decided that I would like to try it. I asked my sister to go and borrow the book for me. As I could not read more than a few minutes at a time, she read to me a great deal and I began to get a little stronger right away. A little improvement could be seen the first day, and such a feeling of peace came to me that I thought, This surely is the way Jesus healed the people when he was here on earth. I was soon able to sit up and with assistance take a few steps. After reading about two weeks we called a practitioner and she lovingly began treatment for me. I felt much better after the second treatment, walked around in the house that evening, and next morning dressed myself, something I had not done for a long time. After dinner I told my husband that I would like to go outdoors, so he took me out in the yard for a few minutes. We could see so much improvement each day. I commenced helping with the housework the fourth day and in just one week's treatment was completely healed. At the end of that time I walked one block and climbed a flight of stairs to visit some relatives, then walked home again, and without any ill effects. I knew I was perfectly healed and that God had healed me. Words cannot express my happiness, for it was so wonderful to me and my heart overflowed with gratitude. Since that time many discordant conditions have been overcome. Divine Love has met every need in our home; my husband and I have both had many healings and we have been very thankful for every one. Each experience has been added proof to us that God is ever present and that He is all-power.

Fear, resentment, and self-condemnation have been overcome to a great extent, for which I am truly grateful. I thank God for all of these blessings.

I am also very grateful to Mrs. Eddy for giving us the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," so that we may understand the Bible; also for all of the Christian Science literature. My earnest desire is that I may grow in understanding and be able to help others as I have been helped, and that I may have more of that Mind in me "which was also in Christ Jesus."

It is with a heart full of gratitude that I testify to my healing through Christian Science. I was taken very ill with what the doctors called shingles and suffered great pain in my right leg and was extremely nervous. I tried many remedies but nothing seemed to help me. I went to the hospital and had various kinds of treatments, but nothing seemed to give me relief so I returned to my home much discouraged. A friend suggested that I try Christian Science treatment, so I asked a Christian Science practitioner in my neighborhood to give me treatment. In a short time I began to feel better, the nervousness began to leave me and I could sleep as I had not done for months, and felt rested. All pain and nervousness soon left me and I knew I was healed. When I returned to my work I found my disposition much changed. Being manager of a large business I had been irritable from rush and worry. I found that my work did not bother me any more and I myself was becoming habitually kind and gentle and patient. I could hardly believe such a change possible. For this wonderful healing I am grateful to God and am grateful to Mrs. Eddy for the discovery and unfoldment of this beautiful truth. I am grateful to the practitioner who was so faithful and earnest in bringing about the healing.

(Mrs.) Winifred Tudor, Boston, Mass.

To say that I am grateful and rejoice is to express but faintly my thankfulness to God and my gratitude to Mrs. Eddy for the many blessings that have come to me and mine through the study and teachings of Christian Science. Not only am I grateful for the wonderful healings, but I am most grateful for the moral and spiritual regeneration while studying the textbook. It is nearly six years since Christian Science was introduced to me, up to which time I had been a martyr to muscular rheumatism, for long periods unable even to bathe myself. I also suffered from chronic hemorrhoids, a terrible form of neurasthenia, and insomnia for which a powerful opiate had to be given to keep me from becoming demented.

Specialists were consulted. I was told that I had a most dangerous growth on the bowel and must undergo an operation. I was full of misery, had become exceedingly weak, and wished that it was all ended. I was placed in a nursing home for this operation, but it was postponed, and I was taken home for a little time. While lying in bed in the depths of despair, without hope and without God, Christian Science was mentioned to me, and I now know that what has proved to be true thousands of times, was again proved true in my own case; namely, that "man's extremity is God's opportunity." It brought to me some understanding of Truth and Life, though at first I doubted its efficacy. Never shall I forget the first visit of a dear Christian Scientist who, after some explanation of the healing power of Christian Science, read from the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, which seemed to sooth me in my wearied condition.

The next thing I remembered was apologizing for having been nearly asleep! Both the practitioner and my wife laughed, saying, "Why, you've been asleep two hours." I could not understand it then,—to sleep without a strong opiate,— but I felt it was the power of Truth contained in that book, and that I must know more about it. I asked for help, which was cheerfully given, and my heart goes out in loving gratitude to this practitioner whose most patient, self-sacrificing, and loving devotion helped me to overcome not only many physical discords, but to find a God who is ever willing to answer prayers. While he was helping me to gain some understanding of this ever healing truth, all these seeming discordant conditions vanished.

I did not undergo an operation, and am now hale and hearty, doing gardening or anything that I wish. I am also very happy in the privilege of taking part in the activities and formation of a Christian Science Society. My earnest hope is that I may understand still more of this beautiful truth, and be a channel to help others as I have been helped. God is good and His promises sure. I am indeed most grateful for the nearness of God which Christian Science reveals.

My blessings have been many and I feel I must send a second testimony. In 1913 whilst in school I was examined by a Harley Street eye specialist who ordered me to wear glasses and said I would have to wear them constantly. I studied Christian Science for about two and a half years before discontinuing the wearing of them, and though for a while my sight was very poor, I did my best to put into practice my understanding that sight is spiritual. After a few months I saw clearly. I have lately done much traveling and can sew, write, or read in a moving train with perfect comfort. I am very thankful for the freedom.

During the war a beloved one passed on, and in the seeming darkness Science was indeed the divine Comforter. Last year my left arm became paralyzed and useless. I was unable to help myself so after a week I got help from a practitioner, and within two days the pain had vanished and I was able to use my arm again, and was given strength to pack up our household belongings during that week, working over ten hours a day. I am very grateful for all the literature and for being able to help others. I know that Science cannot fail; I have only to be faithful.

Christian Science was presented to me six years ago, at a time when, to human sense, I had to have relief or pass on. I took it up solely for physical healing and as a last resort. I not only have been healed of physical ailments, but have found God,—a God who is Love, and a religion that, when correctly applied, solves all problems of daily life. Stomach and bowel trouble, extreme nervousness, also a chronic disease, have all been healed by the application of Christian Science. I am grateful that such thoughts as self-pity, self-condemnation, self-depreciation, and sensitiveness have been overcome.

I am trying to prove my gratitude to our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, by living the beautiful truth that she in her unselfishness and purity discovered and gave to the world in her book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." The Christian Science periodicals are a source of so much help and comfort.

My healing was not instantaneous, but I am grateful for the slow healing, for during that time I learned that God is the only Physician. Therefore, I would say to any one whose healing seems to be slow, Be not discouraged. For the physical healings I am grateful, but for the spiritual uplift and the healing of sin I am more grateful. I am grateful to the practitioners and kind friends who have so lovingly and patiently helped me along the right way.

When I first turned to Christian Science five and a half years ago, I had not known relief from pain for ten years. The optic nerve of one eye was cramped and congested and much inflamed, causing pain in the other eye also, through overstrain. I had been treated by four different specialists. After treating my eyes once a week for six months, changing my glasses on an average of a new pair every two weeks the last oculist finally told me nothing more could be done for me. Three months later my sight had become so blurred, and my eyes so increasingly painful, that I could not read or do any close work. Very despondent, I went to a Christian Science practitioner, feeling that if there was any method by which I could regain my sight, I must try it even though it meant the giving up of my church. Even then my religious prejudice was so intense that I was ready to reject the help of Christian Science had the practitioner during that first interview used a single quotation from Mrs. Eddy's writings. In this particular I believe the practitioner to have been divinely led as she referred only to the Scriptures, so familiar to me yet seemingly so new in the comfort they gave. Indeed I thought them misquoted, and was puzzled until I looked up the quotations in the Bible, to verify them.

I was given one treatment and was asked to read Science and Health by Mary Baker Eddy while taking treatment. I borrowed a copy as I did not wish to own the book after finishing treatments; that is, I thought I did not. I read a paragraph each day merely to comply with the practitioner's request, but read it with distaste and in a spirit of criticism. On Sunday morning nine days after the one treatment I had had I took up the book and started to read. Then the thought came to me that if Christian Science was to help me at all I must read this book more open-mindedly. I read for about ten minutes, forgetting the pain and the blurring of the words. When I read some lines in the chapter on "Prayer," I then understood that the healing works of our Lord were not miracles, but the result of the application of a scientific understanding of Principle, which had always been in existence, and is as efficacious now as then. At the moment of that understanding I felt a sharp twitch in the optic nerve of the eye most affected and I knew that the adjustment of my sight had taken place. In that moment of sudden relief from pain, I knew with joy that sight is spiritual, never in nor of matter, and that all healing is possible in Christian Science. I threw away three pairs of glasses at the time. I am deeply grateful to the practitioner who so lovingly led me to this understanding.

Another healing was that of chapped knuckles with which I had been troubled during the winter for a number of years. I always avoided having them seen because of their unsightliness, and was embarrassed one Sunday morning when I saw that they were being noticed by a Scientist to whom I was talking. I apologized for their appearance. A little later I was on my way to church and during the service I realized that I was conscious of no discomfort and on removing my gloves I found my hands completely healed. That healing occurred nearly four years ago and I have had no return of the trouble. In connection with this trouble there had always been the fear of putting my hands into water as it aggravated the condition; this fear has also left me.

For these and numerous other blessings which I have received in Christian Science I can never be thankful enough, and for Mrs. Eddy's discovery of Christian Science.

About six years ago I was in a very sickly condition and had given materia medica every opportunity I could think of to restore health, but it was of no avail, for I only fell deeper into a darker and more sorrowful condition. One Wednesday I made up my mind to investigate Christian Science, believing it to be just the same as any other denominational religion. I went and found it to be only what was good for any one to learn and decided then to go also to the next Sunday's service to see what sort of Sunday services they held. I heard only that which God had always taught His children through the teachings of His beloved Son Jesus Christ. I went home happy and full of new inspiration, but not realizing that God had already met my needs. When I got home my eyes pained me terribly, and I had to wear glasses. They had bothered me once before in the same way, but when I had taken the glasses off I could not do without them, so I thought this intense suffering to be the same condition presenting itself again. I took off my glasses and found my eyes perfectly well. I must say that I was the happiest woman that moment, and ever after, as I never needed them again, and to this day I have not been bothered again with my eyes. I have also been healed of internal trouble, rheumatism, Cuban itch, severe pains, and weakness which I used to suffer from all the time.

I am also deeply grateful for the understanding I have received through reading the literature, and I can say that God is present everywhere. I am so grateful to God for these wonderful healings. I am not able to utter enough thanks to Mrs. Eddy for her wonderful words of truth which she gave every one through her textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures."

In Habakkuk 2:2 we are told, "Write the vision, and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth it." It is with a loving sense of gratitude that I write this testimony, in appreciation of the countless blessings that have come to me and mine through the study and application of Christian Science, as taught by our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy. I did not come into Christian Science for physical healing. It was with the earnest desire to be of assistance to one near and dear to me, who seemed, at that time, to be greatly in need of help. The result was that I received an instantaneous healing of a very painful ear trouble, from which, like the woman in the Bible, I "had suffered many things of many physicians . . . and was nothing bettered."

Since that time many discordant conditions and problems have been overcome, some quickly and others very slowly. For all of these I am most profoundly grateful, as I am learning each and every day that as I have "been faithful over a few things" I have been made "ruler over many things." I am also learning that in proportion as we apply our understanding of the Christ, Truth, in like degree are we able to demonstrate its healing efficacy.

I am also most grateful for all the periodicals, and particularly so for The Christian Science Monitor, with its daily healing message for the good of all mankind.

The testimonies which appear in the Sentinel and Journal are very interesting and I enjoy them very much and feel as if it were time to add my own. My attention was brought to Christian Science in one of our large army camps. At that time I was paying but very little attention to church or religion. I became interested by overhearing a conversation between some of the boys and a Christian Scientist. His answers to their questions were like a cup of cold water to one wandering in the desert, and before he left us I asked him for a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," which he gave me. That day was the turning point of my life. I immediately began to study my newfound treasure and in a few weeks I overcame the tobacco habit of about fifteen years' standing. I had been a victim of severe headaches for a long time, but since reading Science and Health I have been free from them. Chilblains were healed just from reading in this wonderful little book. But what I am most grateful for is the new life it has taught me to lead. It is a wonderful help in overcoming all problems one meets in daily life. To express one's gratitude in words is impossible. I cannot but give thanks to God, and to Mrs. Eddy, our dear Leader, for the treasure she has given us in Christian Science.

Adolph A. Tessmer, Excelsior, Minn.

I would like to express my very sincere appreciation for Christian Science, for Mary Baker Eddy, and for all of the periodicals. I did not come into Science for any physical healing. I had always enjoyed the testimonies of others, and when I had a need I turned very naturally to Science and was healed of the bondage to glasses almost instantaneously, laying them aside as useless, and without their aid reading "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mrs. Eddy. Finally the daily lesson was studied and the Bible read through, followed by a desire to read the periodicals.

Now after several years a clearer understanding is coming and I rejoice in knowing that a demonstrable religion is here. My little girl of four years is an earnest little student and my husband is much interested. We have had many healings, including the overcoming of colds, chicken pox, and indigestion. Each day brings many helpful and corrective thoughts and we are glad to know that, in the words of the psalmist, "Thou wilt shew me the path of life: in thy presence is fulness of joy; at thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore."

There must be other mothers who are passing through the ordeal of the sense of loss such as I experienced a year and a half ago when my dear son, a boy of sixteen, passed away at one of our public schools, after only three days' illness. I send this testimony, knowing it will reach these hearts, and comfort them, as I have been comforted. For a while I lost all sense of God as good and just groped in darkness, although I had known of Christian Science for about eight years. I could find no comfort in it in my selfish grief; in fact, never during that one year did I even open my copy of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures."

On the anniversary of the passing of my boy, I felt impelled to visit one of our reading rooms, where I had always had such a sense of peace and rest, found nowhere else. I knew there was help and comfort for me if I would earnestly seek it. Never shall I forget the loving help I met that day and the glorious healing I have had from sorrow and a sense of separation. It came very gradually, but I was lovingly and patiently guided into the right way of thinking. I know that my son lives and moves and has his being, now and always, in God, Life, and that we never are and never can be separated. For a while I could not part again with my other son, although he loved his school life. I could not overcome the fear that he also might be taken from me. That fear has now disappeared and he is happy, away at his school again. He is a student of Christian Science and has been an untold comfort to me in my darkest hours. I know that he is in God's care, and that no harm can come near him.

I have been healed of a desire for and use of stimulants, a dreadful sense of resentment, and many bodily ailments. For all these blessings I daily try to prove my fervent gratitude to God and to our Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, who has so gloriously shown us the way to heaven, harmony, through right thinking and living, here and now. Truly the kingdom of God is within, and the truth is waiting for us to receive it.

With a grateful heart I wish to give thanks for the teachings of Christian Science and for God's great and omnipresent love. First, I desire to express gratitude for the wonderful spiritual awakening which I received through this teaching. Since I know that God's love surrounds me I do not worry any more. All our needs are met as soon as we become conscious of the fact that divine Love is the source of supply and that we cannot lack anything. On this point I could relate daily experiences and state how we were healed in many instances during the war, as well as how we are being helped now. I am also able to tell of healings of several sicknesses in the family, among which is the healing of my daughter of a severe nervous trouble, resulting in insanity. To the great astonishment of the physician, who considered the case very serious, she was completely restored in ten days. My son was also healed in a short time of severe grippe accompanied by fever and delirium. Our small child was freed of heavy fever and vomiting. Over a year ago I was healed of articular rheumatism in a severe form.

I also wish to mention a wonderful healing of the results of an accident which took place some time ago. While coasting on a sled, we ran into an automobile at full speed. Before commencing the ride I sent my small daughter from our sled to another, quite contrary to my usual custom of constantly keeping her with me, and through this she avoided the accident. I myself knew nothing of the whole affair. I was told afterwards that I was thrown about six yards and, according to the statement made by the physicians at the hospital to which I was taken in an unconscious state, suffered a broken thigh, fracture of the skull, and concussion of the brain. The accident occurred on a Saturday night, and as soon as my husband received word of it Christian Science treatment was asked for, which was immediately given. On Tuesday I had regained full consciousness, and to the astonishment of the physicians the second X-ray picture showed no trace of the fracture of the skull, but they refused permission for me to leave the hospital, although I was not receiving medical aid. During my stay there I never had reason to complain of pain, the physicians repeatedly expressing amazement over this fact. Although the doctors had told my husband that my leg would probably remain shortened, it was found on my departure that it was exactly the same length as the other. During these weeks I received love from all sides. For these proofs of the healing efficacy of Christian Science I express whole-hearted thanks to God.

(Mrs.) MARIE KIRSTEN, Zurich, Switzerland.

It is a great pleasure to give the following testimony of healing through Christian Science. In March, 1919, I was taken with a severe attack of influenza which was overcome in two treatments from a practitioner. The following August I had a severe attack of lumbago, followed by typhoid fever, both of which yielded to Christian Science treatment. Both my wife and I find that Christian Science fills every need and cures every ill, and we would not go back to the old way of living under any circumstances. God bless Mrs. Eddy for devoting her life for the benefit of mankind.

O. H. HEIL, Oconto, Wis.

As I have been helped so much from testimonies in the Sentinel and Journal, I wish to express my gratitude to God and to Mrs. Eddy for this beautiful truth. We know there is no problem that comes up that cannot be met if Science is rightly applied. I wish to tell of a healing I had of influenza and pneumonia. I was awakened one night breathing with great difficulty. The neighbors did not think I would last until morning, but at twelve o'clock a practitioner was called and I read Science and Health propped up in bed, not being able to lie down. By three o'clock with absent treatment I was entirely easy, and only had two other treatments. I got up next morning and attended to all my household duties. This is only one of the many blessings I have had in Science. I did not come into Science for physical healing, but because through the study of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, I have gained a better understanding of God and the Bible.

True Rest

ETHEL E. HOLMES

WEARY, while miles stretch before me,
Fagged by the long way I've trod,
I hear, ever nearer and sweeter:
Be still, and know I am thy God.

Worn by the weight of world worries,
Scourged by the chastening rod,
Yet I hear o'er the noise and the tumult:
Be still, and know I am thy God.

Blessed the peace of that knowing!
My eyes lift and see not the clod,
For force and fear yield to the mandate:
Be still, and know I am thy God.

Signs of the Times

[The Congregationalist and Advance]

The world of growing things is a witness just now to the power of quiet and hidden forces. Yesterday—or it seems but yesterday—the fields were gray and sodden, the trees gaunt and bare; to-day the grasses are quickened into green, and a misty wonder of verdure clothes every tree with gracious beauty which will soon have deepened into the full foliage of early summer. The meadows are gemmed with gold, and shy and sleeping things have awakened to their all too brief season of blossoming. Winter wheat is tall enough to bend to passing winds and the corn has begun to draw faint emerald lines across new-planted fields. All this has been done in silence and by forces which, though we may work with them and be thereby tremendously reinforced, nevertheless go about their business with a kind of elemental certainty, unhastened by our restlessness, unchecked by our hesitations.

This steadfastness of quiet things is a great comfort in a world like ours, so divided in its counsels, so doubtful of its purposes. If spring had been left to us, quite likely we should never have had any spring at all. The Senate would have debated it, the Supreme Court adjudicated it, and the Administration would have considered it in the light of the next election. The Labor Unions would probably have voted to strike over it and Capital, doubtful of its dividends, would have been unwilling to have made any investments in anything so unsubstantial as leaves and blossoms and grass. We should probably have called meetings and passed resolutions and appointed committees. The committees would not have met until July and meanwhile we should have lived through a springless world.

As we contemplate the failures of the reputed wise and great into whose hands the issues of history are just now entrusted, it is a great comfort to know that there are still forces which really get something done. Spring after all is a tremendous achievement. Sun and rain and life and mother earth have done their blessed part and remade our world, even as we watched it. Perhaps it is after all the quiet, hidden forces which we need to cultivate and to trust.

The great things of life do not depend upon machinery, least of all such a creaking machinery as ours. They depend upon labor and faith and friendship and quiet openness to the ways of God, the use of His forces and obedience to His laws.

So much more need, then, that we strengthen the quiet forces, making much of education and religion and the shaping of character and the realizing amongst us of the spirit of Jesus Christ. Our machinery has outrun our moral and spiritual force. We have sought to secure a League of Nations when we have as yet no really international mind. We are anxious for socialized organization, while we lack the socialized soul. We have wanted all the fruits of the Tree of Life whose very leaves are for the healing of the nations, when it has hardly so much as been planted in our human soil. We ought not to be discouraged, but we do need to go about our work with a larger patience and a clearer vision.

Only as we create the international mind can we hope for a true international organization. Only as we create the love of peace and the willingness to pay for it, can we hope for peace in our troubled world. Only as we are rich in the spirit of Jesus Christ, can we secure the fruits of Christianity in the manifold complexities of our lives. And we shall secure these deep and necessary things only through an utter hospitality to those quiet forces of the Divine, which are waiting to change our lives and our world as the God of growing things has remade our fields and our forests.

[Charles R. Brown, D. D., LL. D., in The Biblical World]

The hour is coming swiftly when it will be seen that all any man is worth is to be found in the good he has done and in the character he has won.

Letters of Appreciation

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. Extracts from such letters follow:

IT is a continued and constant source of gratification to find THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, without exception, of great interest, no matter how old as to date.

I WOULD also like to add my appreciation of such a valuable newspaper. To me there is nothing that compares with its news service and in many other respects it is the most desirable newspaper I ever saw.

IT gives the writer great pleasure to extend the hearty congratulations of our community to you and yours in connection with the work which you are doing with your editorials. The many interesting articles concerning our native land (Greece) are of great interest to each and all of us, numbering in all about two thousand.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR is indeed filling a place in the world affairs that no other daily newspaper is anywhere approaching with regard to reading the signs of the times. I wish personally to thank the Editor for God-inspiring editorials, which are doing much to mold and fashion public opinion in the direction of right thinking.

YOUR paper has a nation-wide reputation for its foreign news, and I wish to compliment the publishers on this splendid service.

I RECOGNIZE your publication as an authority upon all affairs of world-wide interest, and therefore look forward with interest and a great deal of pleasure to receiving the copies.

LET me here express my gratitude for all of our Christian Science literature. I have had instantaneous healings from reading these splendid articles in THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR. In fact, most of the articles in our periodicals seem to be especially written for me.

I SIMPLY have not words to express my appreciation of the value of these publications (MONITOR, SENTINEL, and JOURNAL). THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR covers many subjects. The editorials are solid comforts and keep my thought clear. Truth and Love surely shine through all the pages of the MONITOR. It is a true blessing.

"What I say unto you I say unto all, WATCH." Jesus

VOLUME XXII AUGUST 14, 1920 NUMBER 50

Arise

THEOPHILUS ALLEN

IN these days of rapid change, amid the restlessness of peoples all the world over, one has hardly time, supposedly, to pause, so great seems to be the endeavor for a man to attain the height of his ambition—it matters not in what direction that ambition lies. In spite, however, of seeming human limitations, there is always hope for the active man. He is bent upon exerting every energy to reach that height which he has set out to attain. Notwithstanding all obstacles, and however good it may seem to him from the base upon which he started, it must of necessity be insufficient to satisfy him if that premise be human. All the pleasure and joy of human sense testimony may be brought to bear upon this career; he may reach the goal where he has abundant possessions and wealth; yet he is not satisfied with his achievement. This being so, he pauses to think of the absence of happiness,—why with this abundance he is not content,—what it is that he lacks. Perhaps his thought has been arrested by a present day Paul, who has seen how idolatrous has been his concept and perchance brought to his remembrance the saying of Paul to the Athenians: "Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you." Whatever it may be, he has nevertheless found the opportunity to turn his activity in the opposite direction from his idolatry, to set his affections "on things above,"—to arise. He is earnestly attracted to the higher meaning of life and living and its achievement.

Perchance a man may have attained the position where, in a life of humanly intelligent activity, at the very zenith of his success, sudden calamity overtakes him, and he is deprived in belief of one of his active faculties—perhaps of the very one he considers the most useful and needful. He is curtailed in his endeavors and forced to depend on others. Being deprived of the ability, humanly speaking, to do for himself that which he always has accomplished alone, he now meditates upon his dependence on others. Here again he discovers that the capacity to think is ever present. He ponders, examines himself, and in his self-analysis honestly seeks the remedy. With opening vision such a one finds the hope within that is bound to rise above the bondage of human sense, discovers the cause of right activity, and commences the ascent in thought which leads above the mists to the sunlight that purifies and invigorates. So pregnant with meaning is this small word "Arise," that he flings away his false concept of ambition and replaces it with the true, the real effort to attain the salvation which is from on high.

The lack of satisfaction is discovered to be the outcome of ignorance, the darkened physical sense which had shut out the light of wisdom—though always masquerading as wisdom. The real effort one makes on arriving at this conclusion is the grasping of the opportunity to think aright and gain the true knowledge of one's origin and environment. The Bible and "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy reveal the fundamental rule for learning the reality of man in God's image, to the utter destruction of the ignorance or humanly false belief of man as mortal. This is the healing. Mrs. Eddy says in Science and Health (Preface, p. vii): "The time for thinkers has come. Truth, independent of doctrines and time-honored systems, knocks at the portal of humanity," and again, on page 123 she says, "Divine Science, rising above physical theories, excludes matter, resolves things into thoughts, and replaces the objects of material sense with spiritual ideas."

The Bible is replete with instances of this exaltation of thought. Elijah's obedience in seeking the height of Horeb, notwithstanding the suggestion of death, under the juniper tree, because, as he said, he was not better than his fathers, enabled him to hear "the still small voice" and complete his work according to spiritual understanding. Why did Moses lift up the serpent in the wilderness? Did the thing of brass possess any virtue to heal, in itself? Was it not rather to exalt the thought of the people to the comprehension of the power of wisdom and spiritual understanding, and away from the destructive concept of material sense? Jesus of Nazareth presents the same fact in these words: "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." Repeatedly did our Master prove this in his healing work. At Nain, in the raising of the widow's son, he said, "Young man, I say unto thee, Arise," and in the restoration of Jairus' daughter to life, his command was practically the same: "Talitha cumi . . . Damsel, I say unto thee, arise."

As Jesus in his day taught mankind, through his knowledge of the allness and omnipresence of God, how to rise above material sense and seek the true way in righteousness,—that exact knowledge of God which he named "the truth," saying, "If ye continue in my word . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free,"—so, in this age, through the spiritual vision, fidelity, and wisdom of God's messenger, Mary Baker Eddy, humanity has Christian Science proclaiming the fact that material sense, with its vague hypotheses, can never reveal the truth of being, but that spiritual sense does reveal God and enables the human race to grasp the nature of God as Mind, and man's relationship to Mind, as His idea, establishing the scientific unity between God and man and uplifting humanity to the true consciousness of being. Isaiah in prophetic utterance had proclaimed this fact ages before. "Arise, shine," he exhorted; "for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee." Truth is always true, and what was true in Isaiah's time, is true now. The human race can therefore open the gates of understanding, by turning to Christian Science and receiving its message. Thereby we can expel false human theories and with sheer joy and gratitude replace them with the spiritual idea for ever associated with Mind,—man inseparable from God, the divine Principle of His being.

The truth about ambition, aim, and desire is revealed. A man has the ability to rise above every false concept of material sense and rejoice in the discovery and apprehension of the fact that for every false belief the exact truth exists.

In deed and in truth, a glorious revelation to this age is this glimpse of the Christ, Truth, the ability to distinguish between the real and the unreal, to exchange every wrong thought for Love's idea. Mrs. Eddy makes this quite clear in Science and Health, where she says, beginning on page 574: "Then thought gently whispers: 'Come hither! Arise from your false consciousness into the true sense of Love, and behold the Lamb's wife,—Love wedded to its own spiritual idea.' Then cometh the marriage feast, for this revelation will destroy forever the physical plagues imposed by material sense." This understanding is open to all mankind. The active man, then, finds his activity turned in the right direction, and as he is faithful to his understanding of good and practically applies it in his daily life, he demonstrates the exact measure of its power in the destruction of evil. This supreme joy of expressing God is well stated in one of our hymns (Hymnal, p. 125):—

Know, O child, thy full salvation;
Rise o'er sin and fear and care;
Joy to find, in every station,
Something still to do, or bear.

"Crumbs of comfort"

MARY E. ARMSTRONG

ON page 234 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy writes, "Whatever inspires with wisdom, Truth, or Love—be it song, sermon, or Science—blesses the human family with crumbs of comfort from Christ's table, feeding the hungry and giving living waters to the thirsty." Some beginners in Christian Science go through seeming difficulties in trying to get understanding and perhaps the experience of one may help others.

When I first read the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, I did not seem to be able to grasp anything tangible from it to work on. It all seemed to me a beautiful theory until I later learned that I had to put it into practice and demonstrate it to gain its wonderful fruition. After several weeks' desultory reading I opened the book one day at page 469 and read the question, "What is Mind?" and its wonderful answer. As I read it and the truth dawned on me, I realized that I must first think rightly,—that is, understand my way into the kingdom of heaven, which is really at hand. I found at first that one does think rightly perhaps once or twice a day, but that during the rest of the time the thoughts wander willy-nilly. It is astonishing, however, to see how with the study of the Lesson-Sermon one does learn to pull one's self up gradually and form a steadier habit of right thinking, until with spiritual growth, help, and study one forms the habit of thinking rightly all the time and with a steadiness that surprises even one's self. It is all practice; and practice makes perfect.

Soon after beginning this study I was plunged into activities in connection with the world war, and though still reading Christian Science I was not giving it steady attention, as my thought was evidently not stable enough and was easily drawn into other channels. Circumstances arose which caused me to go and live quietly in the country, and since then I have discovered that Christian Science is an exact Science, applicable to every detail of one's daily life. At first in the country I seemed to have no occupation whatever until one day I opened "Miscellaneous Writings," at page 60, and read, "Every material belief hints the existence of spiritual reality; and if mortals are instructed in spiritual things, it will be seen that material belief, in all its manifestations, reversed, will be found the type and representative of verities priceless, eternal, and just at hand."

I applied this to my problem and found that the belief was lack of material work; this reversed meant abundance of spiritual work at hand. I looked for it, saw I had all of Mrs. Eddy's works new and unread, and then and there determined to read them. It did not seem an easy task, but I persevered. I used to take these books and sit out in a field alone and study them. They were all read straight through and a wealth of spiritual understanding unfolded to me! All the time I was praying for understanding, never beginning to read without that little prayer from the Psalms, "Give me understanding, and I shall keep thy law; yea, I shall observe it with my whole heart." I read Science and Health through twice, and each time this sentence on page 19 seemed to stand out above all else: "Thou shalt have no belief of Life as mortal; thou shalt not know evil, for there is one Life,—even God, good." It seemed to me the summum bonum and the all of Christian Science. If one could demonstrate that sentence for one day, or for even one hour, what progress one would make! At this crisis to-day in world affairs and in all the unrest of mortal thought, if we Christian Scientists could all obey that command, "Thou shalt not know evil" of any kind, shape, or description, how we would help the world, and, above all, how we would help our fellow Christian Scientists! Christian Science reveals this great fact,—namely, perfection is. This truth is to be demonstrated now. To me the study of the two words "perfect" and "perfection," with the concordances to Science and Health and Mrs. Eddy's other writings, has been most illuminating.

To return to my own experiences: I have lately had to demonstrate the unreality of evil. My husband and I were looking for a home in a beautiful resort. To mortal sense the demand for any kind of accommodation in this town was so great that it seemed impossible to find one of any sort. But very distinctly and twice we were directed to a most suitable home and shown very clearly that this was our place. Then friends suggested that it was foolish taking a home just now with the seeming disturbance in world conditions, lack of servants, lack of labor, high prices of food, and difficulty of getting things. I thought of them all and then clearly saw that all material belief must be ruthlessly brushed aside and I must get to the fundamental spiritual facts. I turned to Science and Health and found this as my basis for work: There is no material law, and perfection is. I then resolved to hold firmly to these two points. What a comfort and help the latter thought has been to me. It matters not what the seeming, perfection is; perfection always is.

Suffice it to say, all the so-called material difficulties were rendered null and void. I found a most suitable maid and experienced no scarcity of anything; and I found all I required at the right time. For the painting, decorating, and furnishing I relied absolutely on the truth contained in lines 21-27 of page 247 of Science and Health. A seeming difficulty with a painter over obtaining a certain color was easily overcome; window poles which I was told in two shops I could never find, were brought to me, exactly as I wanted them. I also received help from an article in a Sentinel of last year, entitled "Gratitude," in which the writer said, "Man's environment is perfect because man is always with God." I feel that one can certainly prove that there is no question, however seemingly insignificant, whether physical, moral, financial, which does not find its answer in Science and Health.

As to so-called physical conditions, I was what is known to the doctors as a nervous case; in fact, my so-called nerves seemed as bad as they could be. I have discovered that in my own case lack of nerve control nearly always means mental laziness. There is no circumstance beyond our control. Man has dominion over all. When things seem impossible and the belief of nerves seems to suggest itself, if we then and there strongly and steadily know that we can overcome, that we have strength for every circumstance, and that false belief is a temptation to separate ourselves from God, we do overcome, and the overcoming of so-called nervousness can become a stepping-stone to higher things. There is but one infinite Person—God, and there is nothing but God. Let us then help each other, help our cause, our church, and our periodicals by being exact Christian Scientists, and let us demonstrate this Science in obeying Jesus' command, as interpreted by Mrs. Eddy, "Thou shalt not know evil," and steadily and persistently affirm it matters not what the seeming, perfection is! Mrs. Eddy says in "Unity of Good" (p. 7), "Certain self-proved propositions pour into my waiting thought in connection with these experiences; and here is one such conviction: that an acknowledgement of the perfection of the infinite Unseen confers a power nothing else can." If God is all, then all must be perfection, and as our Leader tells us on page 158 of Miscellany, "The burden of proof that Christian Science is Science rests on Christian Scientists."

Distinguished Service Order

FLORENCE BOSWELL

THESE words convey a world of meaning in human experience; they stand for a military decoration given for prompt action taken oblivious of personal safety; for a recognition of achievement, of victory. Two pictures present themselves to me: A young man in command of a company of men, who, having taken part in a reconnaissance in force and taken possession of one of the enemy's trenches, when the counterattack developed and the time came for retiring saw that all his men were out of the trench before he was, and after successfully repulsing the first attack of the enemy sprinted back to the lines, taking advantage of any available cover, and safely rejoined his men.

Another picture: A young officer patiently training men year in and year out, keeping up their enthusiasm in their work and imparting it, in spite of all difficulties; and then straightening the line, and unfailingly giving in dispatches to his general. What was their distinguished service which entitled them to the D. S. O.? They, like many, many others, had simply done what to them was the obvious, most natural thing in the world to do; they had put the safety of their fellow men before their own, just as Christian Scientists are doing all the world over. They had no sense of disappointment at not getting a decoration, because it had never entered into their thought, and therefore the world's recognition or lack of it could neither give them anything nor take anything away. The brotherhood of man was so much a part of their daily life that "my safety" and "thy safety" were one, and that Christ-sense had stilled every suggestion of self-preservation at another's expense. Is not this, too, the "way of the Lord" in Christian Science—the way of preparation for the D. S. O. of Spirit, the "Well done, thou good and faithful servant . . . enter thou into the joy of thy lord"?

Mrs. Eddy says on page 15 of her Message to The Mother Church for 1901, "The Christian Scientist has enlisted to lessen sin, disease, and death, and he overcomes them through Christ, Truth, teaching him that they cannot overcome us;" and in Miscellany, page 194, she says, "Only those men and women gain greatness who gain themselves in a complete subordination of self." From the nature of the activity of good, as one awakens to the fact that good is the Life, the Principle of his being, there is an hourly reaching out and striving for perfection in all things,—from a desire for a better understanding of government and a truer representation of the people, to adopting the many methods of saving unnecessary labor and for making less drudgery in experience, as seen in the "ideal homes" and many kindred exhibitions. Truly has Mrs. Eddy said, "The only logical conclusion is that all is Mind and its manifestation, from the rolling of worlds, in the most subtle ether, to a potato-patch" (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 26). John said, "For whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world: and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith,"—in other words, our understanding of the true nature and character of God and man, which comes from silent victories over malice, envy, evil thinking and speaking; victories that no one knows anything about, because the untruths believed about God and His perfect spiritual creation are blotted out and there is no recollection of them; those nameless victories over sense and self that prepare for the day when materiality has been so expunged that there remains nothing but the reflection of Spirit, which thinks, speaks, and acts only as the Father-Mother God directs. That surely is the "D. S. O." of Spirit, and that is an ever expanding sense of Life and activity, blessing all upon whom thought rests. In that consciousness there is no personal sense to offend or be offended, no temptation to be seen or heard of men, to be accounted great in metaphysics or physics, but just an expression of the unselfed love that melts away all the sorrow and suffering and sin, the suspicion and the doubt, and bears unflinching witness to Truth, the truth about God and man in His image and likeness.

The living of our beloved Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, was a daily demonstration of that truth. She had so gained the victory over personal will, wish, and desire, that when she came to others with the fruits of nights of conflict followed by the morning of victory and inspiration, her hearers were inspired to obey lovingly, joyfully, because there was no self-will answering to self-will and no lack of moral courage to invite criticism. Surely that was the secret of her great power and of the willing service she inspired, the selflessness that enabled her to know that "thus saith the Lord" and "none can stay his hand, or say unto him, What doest thou?" Just as Jesus said, "I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God," so it is possible for all to-day, who will, to follow in the steps of him "who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously."

Right Knowing

HELEN T. BELFORD

TO-DAY when the world seems to be divided and confused, hesitating as to what path to choose, amid the apparent maze of ways, the student of Christian Science has but to go to the one source, the one Mind, and he will know beyond a doubt. "Be still, and know that I am God," does not mean sluggish inactivity or standing in the middle of the road inert and asleep. To "be still" is to silence the belief in mortal mind, a belief that by subtle suggestion would mesmerize and influence mortals to believe that evil is good and by false reasoning lead them into devious ways. To "know that I am God" is to know that the divine consciousness is all there is, and because consciousness, or God, is all there is, there is no room for anything else—for any mortal mind suggestion of evil or error, past, present, or yet to come. Mrs. Eddy says in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 367), "It was not against evil, but against knowing evil, that God forewarned."

Much of the time spent in the so-called mortal mind existence is taken up in endeavoring to know what to do, which course is right, what way to take. To many, activity seems to mean flitting about from one personality to another trying to extract the truth from erring mortal mind. A student of Christian Science has the one source, the one Mind, to which to appeal, and the appeal is never in vain. Having scientifically put aside and away from him any suggestion of anything but the one Mind, he can confidently and patiently await the decision of Mind. This, again, is not being sluggish or inactive. It is being harmoniously and eternally active,—active and alert to know that consciousness, God, good, is ever present, ever active, ever operating, ever bringing out the right result. Mortal mind itself recognizes what the result of knowing should be when it places such a weight on the oft quoted phrase, "Knowledge is power," but it misses the very essence of it all by not comprehending that real knowledge,—the only true knowledge there is,—is a realization that there is one Mind, or intelligence, supreme and all-seeing. Right knowing is power, power to prove throughout experience that nothing is real but what is good, enduring, and true.

Giving Testimony

BLANCHE M. WETZELL

WHEN disciples of John came to Jesus with the inquiry, "Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another," his answer was, "Go and shew John again those things which ye do hear and see: The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them." The writer has often thought that there may be a comparison drawn between Jesus' answer and our present Wednesday evening meetings. To the world's questions: "What is your religion? What will it accomplish which our churches do not?" we find at each meeting satisfying answers and ample reason for believing that the promises of Jesus are being fulfilled anew. Christian Scientists do not rejoice as did the Pharisee that they are not as other men nor as the seventy who returned to Jesus rejoicing that devils were subject unto them, but they are grateful, and a continuous song of gratitude is singing itself in their hearts that they have found the kingdom of harmony, where their names have always been written. What wonder, then, that they lovingly bear witness to the Christ and that the Christian Science churches are full at the Wednesday evening meetings.

Giving testimony seemed such a formidable undertaking to the writer and after each attempt she was inclined to self-condemnation because of errors in English, which rose up so vividly to rob her of the spiritual joy which was rightfully hers. Then these words of Mrs. Eddy, on page 505 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" came to her: "This understanding is not intellectual, is not the result of scholarly attainments; it is the reality of all things brought to light." These lines from our textbook brought the realization that each testimony given is an effort to bring the reality, the truth about God to light, to help the hungering one to exchange his mistaken sense of God for the knowledge of Him, who is all good, the preserver of man.

The way in which the speaker expresses his gratitude, giving precedence to the spiritual awakening, is probably new to the guest at the Wednesday evening meeting. At a meeting not long ago the testimonies were on many different phases of Christian Science healing, but in each one the speaker expressed the desire to be all that a Christian Scientist should be, more just, more honest, pure, and loving, proving to the visitor that successful business, good health, and happiness are indissolubly connected with right thinking and living. We must remember that with our testimonies we share the responsibility of bringing out the helpfulness and availability of Christian Science in our meetings. The faithful Reader has performed his part by the study and preparation of his lesson. With what care he selects his references and seeks in the hymnal those hymns which most nearly express the thought the lesson carries. We of the congregation expect to come prepared to do our part. Mrs. Eddy realized this and instituted the silent prayer for the purpose of protecting our services. She writes in the Manual (Art. VIII, Sect. 5), "The prayers in Christian Science churches shall be offered for the congregations collectively and exclusively." The sincere effort, during these moments, to realize God's allness and man's at-one-ment with Him will do much to loosen the bands of self-consciousness and timidity and increase the spontaneity and joy of giving testimony. The spirit of rejoicing which is included in each testimony will give the visitor an impulse to acquaint himself with our literature, to investigate this new-old religion which is redeeming so many thousands from misery, suffering, despair, and death and bringing them into newness of life, freedom, happiness, harmony, and success in honest endeavors.

Mrs. Eddy knew that the success of the Christian Science movement depended upon the individual effort put forth by its followers, their spiritualization and unfoldment, watchfulness, and careful study of our Church Manual and Mrs. Eddy's other works. The application of the statements of the by-law, Article VIII, Section 24, will surely result in implanting in the hearts of guests a desire to know more of God and of His healing truth. Truly giving testimony is an obligation which can be gratefully and faithfully fulfilled, as it includes a most wonderful opportunity for unfoldment both for those testifying and for the listeners.

Count Your Blessings

ALBERT E. BARNARD

WHENEVER a certain student of Christian Science finds the way a bit difficult, and problems do not seem to be solved so quickly as they should be, he harks back to the day when he was healed of very severe inflammatory rheumatism; for that was the day he caught the first real glimpse of God. The circumstance was as follows: Practically over night the argument of this false belief appeared to bind him in iron chains, so that on the following morning he could scarcely move limb or muscle. This student was occupying at the time a rather active and responsible position in a large business establishment, and his first thought was that he should be at his desk, that it was the one period of the year when he could least be spared from his post. And so, being new and uninstructed in Christian Science, he called for a practitioner to set him on his feet at once.

Digitized by Google

For four days absent treatment was given, but no appreciable results seemed apparent. On the fifth day she asked the patient this startling question: "Have you ever counted your blessings?" His reply was in the negative, coupled with the declaration that his chief concern was to be cured so that he could return to business. As a result of her patient insistence, however, that he devote the afternoon to counting up and giving thought to everything for which he should be grateful, he agreed to accept the prescription.

The ultimate effect was wonderful. The student opened the gates in accord with what Mrs. Eddy says in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 201), "The way to extract error from mortal mind is to pour in truth through flood-tides of Love," and the blessings presented themselves so rapidly he had to call for pad and pencil in order to write them down. The hand that had seemed to be in a vise the day before formed the words on the paper without effort or pain. And the list kept on growing. Page one, page two, page three were filled with reasons why he should be positively grateful instead of languidly indifferent. "Where do all these blessings come from?" thought he. And as the sunlight of Truth broke in upon his thought he came face to face, for the first time, with a realization of what God is, and the steel-like grip of false belief that had entangled his free limbs began to weaken.

Out of the contemplation of these many blessings there soon developed the thought of gratitude,—gratitude for an understanding of God, gratitude for the works of Jesus Christ, gratitude for the life and revelation of Mary Baker Eddy, gratitude for all her writings and the various periodicals she founded, gratitude for the fact that he could actually know himself to be a child of the one infinite God, "Our Father-Mother God, all-harmonious" (Science and Health, p. 16),—and he arose and walked the entire length of his apartment. The bonds of resentment, hate, self-will, self-righteousness, self-justification, self-love had melted before the realization of the presence of God, and he was healed. Thus he proved that really there is one infinite blessing, the complete goodness of God.

Although so-called mortal mind endeavored to tell him he could not do it, he next day walked a considerable distance to the home of the practitioner and back again. And the following day, which was Sunday, he attended church and deliberately climbed the stairs to the balcony, to prove that "God is love," and that "Love is the liberator" (Science and Health, p. 225). So to-day, when arguments of false belief try to set themselves up as real, this student counts his blessings, and the clouds of sense disappear into their native nothingness.

Our Isaac

MABEL GORDON-INGLIS

HAST thou an Isaac who is held most dear?
Perchance a memory, or still so near
That every thought of him is fraught with fear?
Give him to God.

Hast thou an Isaac with a gilded crown,
Worldly ambition for the world's renown?
Build thou an altar, humbly lay him down,
Trusting to God.

God gives us back our Isaacs purified,
Tried in the furnace, tested, glorified;
With our desire for good so magnified
That God is All.

["An Understanding Heart"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., June 1, 1920]

In the days when Solomon had succeeded David on the throne at Jerusalem, the new king, facing the problem of judging his people, that is, of ruling them with justice, prayed that he might receive an understanding heart so as to be able to discern between good and evil. The sense in which judgment is freely used, all through the Bible, of the power not to pass sentence on the evildoer but to be able to distinguish good from evil, is made perfectly clear here. Solomon saw the problem that was before him and he asked neither for long life nor for riches nor for revenge—the things commonly so dear to the eastern potentate. He asked, on the contrary, for that mental quality which he conceived would be of most use to his country—namely, the ability to understand Principle. Now every human being stands, in his relation to humanity, in some degree in the position of Solomon. It is true that the ordinary individual is not called upon to rule kingdoms; but he finds himself in the midst of a world stricken with sin and disease, and if he is not to add to that sin and disease, but is to exercise his power to separate good from evil, in order that he may help to destroy the latter, he must, as Solomon saw, possess an understanding heart.

The average man is apt to imagine that he has no opportunity for exercising anything but the most infinitesimal influence in the world. The great power of influence, which, in his philosophy, is reserved for kings and statesmen, for great generals and great poets, is, he believes, entirely outside his reach. Yet the fact is that there is no limitation to his power of influence, except that placed upon it by his own sense of limitation. The whole history of the world is rich with men who have broken the limitations with which they were apparently surrounded. The greatest instance of all is, of course, Jesus of Nazareth, whose understanding of Principle enabled him to be the founder of the Christian religion. But Muhammad started upon his evangelistic career an elderly and unknown merchant with one servant as his follower; whilst centuries later Shakespeare trudged out of Stratford to hold horses at the doors of a London theater; and, again centuries later, a rail-splitter in North America became one of the greatest figures in the world's history.

There is, it is unnecessary to say, a tremendous gulf between the founder of Muhammadanism and the founder of Christianity, just as there is a tremendous gulf between the founder of Christianity and the great English poet and the great President of the United States. But there must have been, even in Muhammad, some sense of Principle, far in excess of that of the Arab world in which he found himself, to have enabled him to stir the savage Bedouin tribesmen into even as much recognition of something beyond the grim materiality of their everyday existence. Of all these men, including Solomon himself, Christ Jesus alone understood the scientific secret of Life, what Mrs. Eddy refers to when she writes on page 506 of Science and Health, "Understanding is a quality of God, a quality which separates Christian Science from supposition and makes Truth final." Yet Solomon in his own way was groping after this final truth when he prayed for an understanding heart, which was an understanding of Principle. At that moment in his career, the king, though in a glass very darkly, saw that neither many years, nor riches, nor revenge, were going to profit a man anything if he should lose his understanding of the fatherhood of Principle. That Solomon failed to live up to what he saw that day was owing to the fact that he was being guided not by a scientific understanding of Principle, but by a fitful gleam of spiritual intuition. That gleam came and went so fitfully that he kept wandering after the will-o'-the-wisp of materiality. One man and one alone, Jesus of Nazareth, ever understood Principle sufficiently not to be diverted from the straight and narrow road by any will-o'-the-wisp, and so to be able to demonstrate the full meaning of Principle in the overcoming of sin, disease, and death. This understanding was possible to him because he had gained it by overcoming the lusts of the flesh, just as through this understanding he was able to overcome these lusts.

The writer of the book of Kings makes it very clear what the lusts of the flesh are which lie between a man and the acquirement of an understanding heart. There is the belief of life in matter, summed up in the demand of the human mind for a long life in the flesh; second, the insatiable demand for riches, the idea that substance is contained in matter, and that pleasure and power can be gained by the accumulation of such substance; and, finally, the passion of revenge, the thing which, sometimes even in the hour of victory, causes a man to let go his hold on Truth, and himself to be swept away in the torrent of animality.

An understanding heart, then, is the realization of Principle which enables a man to separate the true from the untrue,—in other words, the material from the spiritual. In the exact proportion in which he succeeds in doing this he frees himself from the lusts of the flesh and gains the fruits of the Spirit. It is that which Christ Jesus was teaching and demonstrating from one end of his ministry to the other; and it is that which Mrs. Eddy has summed up, on page 178 of Science and Health, where she writes, "In proportion to our understanding of Christian Science, we are freed from the belief of heredity, of mind in matter or animal magnetism; and we disarm sin of its imaginary power in proportion to our spiritual understanding of the status of immortal being."

Christian Scientists are taught, not to deny, but to follow in the steps of Jesus Christ. They use the Lord's Prayer in all their services, and they, so far as they understand, utilize the power of prayer in healing the sick and in reforming the sinner. The fact that we are taught to pray in God's name does not narrow but rather broadens the approach to Him when we learn, even in a small degree, to think of and to know God as the Father-Mother God of all His spiritual, perfect creation, the one omnipresent, infinite, divine Principle, Life, Truth, Love.

[William E. Brown in Riverside (Calif.) Enterprise]

A dispatch of recent date announces the verdict of a New Jersey jury convicting Andrew Walker of manslaughter for the death of his daughter under Christian Science treatment. As this incident has caused much inquiry, the following comment will doubtless be of interest to your readers.

The query that has been expressed, "Why was a physician not called?" illustrates the fixity of adherence to long established customs. In looking over the death notices published in one of our daily papers the fact is disclosed that for the week ending May 4, over one hundred and thirty persons passed away. Doubtless the majority of these died under the care of a regular physician and ceased to exist in a regular and orthodox manner. Here the question may be legitimately asked, "Why was a Christian Science practitioner not called?" Judging by record of achievement and realizing that in many cases Christian Science is employed only as a last resort and frequently saves the patient after all material methods had been exhausted, the failure to call in a Christian Science practitioner might well be denominated "neglect"—and yet there has been no public condemnation nor criminal prosecution.

New Jersey has a peculiar statute which has been construed to mean that medical attention is required. It goes without saying that this is an infringement of personal rights and many of the states have enacted legislation that recognizes the right of parents to employ for themselves and families the method of healing that they deem most efficacious. Healing in Christian Science is identical with the religion of Jesus, who commanded his followers to heal the sick as well as the sinner, and the right to believe in and practice the religion of one's choice is an inherent right of the individual guaranteed by the constitution of free America. This will finally be conceded by courts and juries everywhere.

[Harry K. Filler in The Enquirer, Cincinnati, Ohio]

During the course of his sermon, as reported in a recent issue, a clergyman made some statements about the teachings of Christian Science, which were his opinions of what Christian Science teaches, rather than the actual facts of the teachings of this science of Christianity.

It will always remain the privilege of ministers of the gospel to tell their congregations many things about Christian Science that are not true, but when they see the wisdom of getting at the facts of the Christian Science teachings, and of giving these facts to the hungering hearts of their hearers —and some ministers are doing this to-day—their sermons will heal and save and bless those who have ears to hear and hearts to understand. The Christian church of this and every land must approximate the healing power of Christ, as has been taught and practiced in Christian Science ever since its discovery by Mrs. Eddy in 1866.

Christian Scientists do not affirm, nor is there anything in the teachings of Christian Science that would rightfully cause them to "affirm that they are by nature perfect in soul and body," as this minister asserts. Christian Science does stand on the Bible teachings about man: "So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him." John states, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God." Paul declared that "we are the children of God, heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ." Man in God's likeness must be spiritual, perfect, and true. On page 476 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy states, "Jesus beheld in Science the perfect man, who appeared to him where sinning mortal man appears to mortals. In this perfect man the Saviour saw God's own likeness, and this correct view of man healed the sick."

This is actually the basis on which the healing work in Christian Science is accomplished. We in Christian Science are being taught to look for, and find, God's man, rather than man's man. The ability to do this is gained only in the proportion that we become spiritually minded, or as we put on the mind of Christ, as Paul has admonished. In no particular does the teaching of Christian Science depart from the teaching of Christ Jesus and his healing ministry. Jesus on one occasion cast out a devil, and the dumb spake. This would tend to show that the works of Satan are illusions which Christ, Truth, casts out. Sin and disease would deceive man; they would have him think they have more power than has God, who is omnipotent, omnipresent, and omniscient. Multitudes of men and women have been healed of almost every known disease and sin in Christian Science. Every one of the more than seventeen hundred churches of this denomination throughout the world stands as a monument to the fact that Christ's healing and saving Christianity is again being preached and practiced among men.

[Samuel J. Macdonald in Hudson Dispatch, Union, N. J.]

The brief editorial entitled "Curtailing Religious Freedom" was gratifying indeed as a recognition of the vital and inestimable value of religious freedom. We are apt to forget that religious freedom was the most cherished possession of our ancestors, that our country was first settled by pioneers of spiritual liberty, and that the Federal Constitution and constitutions of the several states guarantee to the fullest extent that freedom which our fathers held so dear. But if this freedom is to be limited by a medical tether, of what practical value are these solemn constitutional guaranties? It is certainly obvious that a tethered freedom is not freedom at all.

You say in the editorial referred to, "It is a serious matter to permit a nine-year-old child to die for want of medical treatment," and you also refer to the child as a "victim of the belief of Christian Science." Surely, the use of such expressions was the result of that sense of haste which often prevails in editorial sanctums. Haste is undoubtedly one of the worst of "the little foxes that spoil the vines." Let us then pause for a moment, forget haste, and stop long enough to think fairly and without prejudice.

Because a child dies under medical treatment, do we accuse the doctor? Or do we speak of the child as a "victim"? No, we do not: we are polite, and say the death could not be prevented, "everything was done for the child, but to no avail." Well, then, when a Christian Scientist proves to be not entirely infallible, why are we not equally polite and fair? Can the difference we make be rated in anything else than prejudice?

If the medical doctor always healed and never lost a case, we might be justified in denouncing as "victims" those who sought other treatment, but until that happy day dawns, assuredly we are not justified in placing other curative systems in the pillory of public scorn.

[Joseph Coffer in Nowata (Okla.) Star]

An evangelist recently delivered a sermon to the church-going people of Nowata, a sermon worn threadbare by repeated use in vain attempts to discredit Christian Science. In this sermon, as reported in a recent issue, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, Mary Baker Eddy, is also assailed. Christian Scientists are charged with the statement that "there is no sin," with the desecration of the Lord's Prayer, and as not believing in a "personal God." Such unmeaning loquacity fails to convince or convert sinners, nor does it draw people from the Christian Science faith.

There is but one God to the Christian Scientist, the God of the Bible, and we are told therein that "God is a Spirit," recognizing all His creation as spiritual. The investigator who enters upon the quest for health, peace, and happiness, with an open mind, discovers in Christian Science that "God is incorporeal, divine, supreme, infinite Mind, Spirit, Soul, Principle, Life, Truth, Love" (Science and Health, p. 465). Emerging from the mists of materialism, which would hang a pall over the spiritual vision, the true man appears, who heretofore has been lost sight of through the belief in sin. Man as understood in Christian Science is the image and likeness of God. The Scriptures corroborate this statement and God's word ends all argument: "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness: and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth." The image and likeness which is referred to is spiritual and perfect, not the base counterfeit referred to by our esteemed critic.

Christian Science is a religion of love, and is known throughout the civilized world as demonstrable in our daily lives. By its study men are made better, seeking higher ideals in every walk of life. It is indeed a religion of progress, enlightening all mankind. Through the discovery of this gentle New England woman, the Bible has been rescued from dusty, secluded corners in many households, and restored to its rightful estate. The teachings of Jesus of Nazareth are again found practicable in everyday affairs; the great truth the Master taught was not for a chosen few but for all who follow in his steps. "Neither pray I for these alone," he said, "but for them also which shall believe on me through their word."

The Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, illumines the pages of the Bible. In a simple way the honest seeker for truth discerns the light. He learns that God is not seated upon a pedestal in a far-off city paved with gold, nor does he find man the sick and sinful creature theology and medicine would have him believe. Coming into possession of his rightful heritage, he learns that man coexists with God; "for in him we live, and move, and have our being," as the Scriptures declare.

The false belief of sin is proved an illusion; examination of the record shows God did not create sin; on the contrary, it shows that all He created "was very good." The seeming reality of sin, to mortal mind, is but an illusion, unreal, and has no origin when understood in Christian Science. Remove the false erring belief from human consciousness by penetrating the camouflage of the five physical senses, and the nothingness of sin and disease will then become apparent.

Spiritual understanding, an essential element in the destruction of sin, is best explained by Mrs. Eddy: "We acknowledge God's forgiveness of sin in the destruction of sin and the spiritual understanding that casts out evil as unreal. But the belief in sin is punished so long as the belief lasts" (Science and Health, p. 497). Prayer brings man into harmony with the operation of God's law. Christian Scientists are a prayerful people, believing in the Scriptural injunction that "the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." Mrs. Eddy devotes an entire chapter in her book to the subject of prayer, and gives there the spiritual interpretation of the Lord's Prayer, which has done much to heal the sins of the world. Mortal man believes in many minds and persons; mankind would personalize God. There is but one God, and through reflection His personality is discerned in limitless ideas. Writing of divine personality Mrs. Eddy says in Science and Health on page 517: "The only proper symbol of God as person is Mind's infinite ideal. . . . This ideal is God's own image, spiritual and infinite. Even eternity can never reveal the whole of God, since there is no limit to infinitude or to its reflections."

Fallen Man

IT would be difficult to say how much of its theology the Anglo-Saxon race owes to Milton. "Paradise Lost" is not, probably, read as much as the greatest poem in the English language should be; indeed it is impossible to escape the conviction that had Milton devoted his genius, as he originally intended, to the Round Table instead of the Garden of Eden, he would be more popular to-day. Time was, however, when Milton set a tremendous impress upon English theology, and that impress is still exerting its influence. Consciously or unconsciously the Protestant world has never rid itself of the eschatology of Calvinism, and deep down in its consciousness is the belief of the human being as fallen from grace, working itself out in the extraordinary belief that material man, passing through death, exchanges a material for a spiritual body, and ascends in this body to a future state known as heaven.

Now heaven, it is generally admitted to-day, is purely a state of mind, a state of mind in which harmony and spirituality prevail. It is defined by Mrs. Eddy, on page 587 of Science and Health, as follows: "HEAVEN. Harmony; the reign of Spirit; government by divine Principle; spirituality; bliss; the atmosphere of Soul." This is the perfect and eternal state of the true image and likeness of God; but it is also a mental condition cognizable on this earth in proportion as the human mind gives place to the Mind of Christ. Christ Jesus made this perfectly clear when he declared, "For, behold, the kingdom of God is within you," obviously meaning that the kingdom of God is a mental condition attained little by little as a man's materiality is destroyed, but unattainable in full until the last vestige of humanity has disappeared and nothing but the true image and likeness of God remains. "In his resurrection and ascension," Mrs. Eddy writes on pages 292 and 293 of Science and Health, "Jesus showed that a mortal man is not the real essence of manhood, and that this unreal material mortality disappears in presence of the reality." The old theology did not look upon it in this way. The old theology taught that a man was born the image and likeness of God, that in death he passed the portals of earthly existence and was either consigned to a material hell or transported, in a condition of spiritualized matter, to a material heaven. This is the inevitable result of the teaching of fallen man, a teaching so subtle that it carries the curse of sin, disease, and death everywhere in its train. If material man was born the image and likeness of God, and by a process of the elimination of evil became a spiritual man, then the fruit of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil would indeed become a reality, the human mind would merge into the divine Mind, matter in some way become Spirit, and evil be gradually converted into good. This is, of course, the very antithesis of Jesus' own teaching. He made it abundantly clear that that which was born of the flesh was flesh, and that that which was born of the Spirit was spirit, just as the writer of the fourth gospel has shown that the sons of God "were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God."

The human mind, with its dense materiality and its terror of self-destruction, fights doggedly against the obvious meaning of Jesus' words, and in its effort to establish itself derives the human being from God, spiritualizes matter, and then damns or exalts God's creation. Yet Jesus made it as clear as it could be made that the human mind is simply a lie about the divine Mind. "Ye are of your father the devil," he declared, speaking of the human being, the image and likeness of the human mind, and this devil he defined as a lie, a mere negation or nothingness, and Paul drove this further home when he wrote to the Galatians, "For if a man think himself to be something, when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself." Writing of this Mrs. Eddy says, on page 345 of Science and Health, "This thought of human, material nothingness, which Science inculcates, enrages the carnal mind and is the main cause of the carnal mind's antagonism."

So long, however, as mental suggestion can induce the human being to cling to the suggestion of fallen man, so long will the human being cling to the suggestion of an image and likeness of the human mind which is a material body, and so long as it clings to this will it be handicapped in the effort to find healing and salvation, by the belief that there is a man to be saved or a man to be healed, instead of a lie to be discovered and to be destroyed. Now just as long as people believe in the reality of material man, so long must they believe in the reality of material disease. From this it follows that just as the sinner is a man fallen from grace, so the sick man is a man who has fallen from health. The truth, of course, is that there never was a healthy human being, since the human mind holds in itself the belief of so-called good and of supposititious evil, making it impossible for health, which is salvation, to proceed from it, unless it is possible to gather figs from thorns or grapes from a bramble bush. The simple fact is that all that actually exists is infinite Mind and the manifestation of infinite Mind, and only in the manifestation of this infinite Mind, which is itself entirely unconscious of the unreality evil, is true health or salvation a possibility. Consequently, divine healing has to be accomplished not through the belief that there is a fallen man to be saved or a sick man to be made physically well but through a realization of the fact that the physical body is just as great a lie about the spiritual body as the human mind is about the divine Mind.

Christ Jesus healed the sick instantaneously, not because he believed that there were any sick to heal, but because he persistently insisted on recognizing the fact that there was nothing real but the perfect man, the image and likeness of God. In the same way he raised the dead, not because he believed that there was a dead man, who had been alive and who was to be restored to life, but because he knew perfectly well that man never had lived in a material body, but that his life, in the words of Paul, was hid in Christ, in God. Declining, in other words, to accept sickness or sin as a reality, he was able to destroy sin, disease, and death, whenever they were presented to him, through his perfect knowledge of their unreality. Had he for a moment believed that man was fallen, he would have been driven to believe that the sick man had once been well, and that the dead man had once been alive. To the human senses all these propositions are perfectly natural ones, and they terminated in a belief of sin, disease, and death, with all its practical effects. But to Christ Jesus they were all nothing but a lie, and he brushed them away with the declaration that the real man was the image and likeness of God, and the material man nothing but the child of evil, and so of nothingness.

Language That Heals

The healing power of the right statement of Truth consists simply in the fact that the idea caused by the divine Mind is always whole. As this wholeness of the true idea takes the place of any human sense of lack, what is called healing comes about. Really, of course, the health that is of Spirit, not matter, always has inhered in the man who is God's image and likeness. Robust action is the only state of real being. To the extent, though, that the surety of this proves the utter nonsense of any fear of seeming limits, just so much of even the dream of evil is vanquished so that it ceases to suppose itself in any fashion. One reason for stating Truth is that this process may go on, for every word of true good shows that the counter lie, called evil, always has been void. Then too, the word of Truth is good in itself because it reveals with constant freshness the boundless Mind that is ever joyous. The student of Christian Science, therefore, is eager to know and to use the richness of right language.

In order to last, the words of Christ Jesus had to be inspired by the divine Mind. In a number of places Mrs. Eddy reminds us that "his words were articulated in the language of a declining race, and committed to the providence of God" (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 163; see also pp. 100 and 121). "In no one thing," she goes on to say, "seemed he less human and more divine than in his unfaltering faith in the immortality of Truth. Referring to this, he said, 'Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away!' and they have not: they still live; and are the basis of divine liberty, the medium of Mind, the hope of the race." It is, indeed, the fact that what is expressed by the divine Mind alone is real that preserves the very statement of the true idea, in all sorts of varied phrases, to declare the Christ, who is present even unto the end of the world.

When one really knows God as the only Mind, one can speak the truth in the simplest words and heal by so doing. Words as arranged in common speech make up what is known as prose. The best and most truly healing written language is that which most nearly equals the best spoken language. All will admit that the spoken words of Christ Jesus, as the four gospels record them, are a model of clear and forceful language for those who are eager to prove constant healing through both wise speaking and wise writing. "Father, I thank thee that thou hast heard me. And I knew that thou hearest me always;"—surely no words could be simpler than these, and yet surely no words could more truly state the healing wholeness of right knowing. As they stand in quiet prose, they state the exact truth to bless the many of all times and places. An attempt to work them over into a sort of verse, charged with mortal feelings, would not improve them. It is the merely mortal feeling that one needs to turn away from in order to know and to prove the simple goodness of God.

Thus by far the most of one's daily language, either in speaking or in writing, is prose rather than verse. As a means for stating the truth, clear, straight prose gives one a freedom that many verse forms surely could not provide. In prose, one can round out his subject with the needful detail, express in full what one has to say, and thus heal through giving wholeness in place of any seeming lack. Much of the verse that is so common in the world to-day consists of mere flashes of mortal feeling, and therefore can state little of the entire idea of good. Human feeling, at its seeming best, is the very reverse of the true feeling of the divine Mind. Hence it has to subside before the calm force of reason that proceeds from Mind and is ever apart from the belief in matter. For the healing logic of Christian Science, Mrs. Eddy herself used mainly prose.

Rightly to enjoy the verse that Mrs. Eddy has written one has to be alert to the import of every word that she has used. Consider, for instance, her poem "Easter Morn" (Poems, p. 30), which is dated, "Pleasant View, Concord, N. H., April 18, 1900." Here she is voicing the truth in every line, with a sure touch and a healing motive that wholly succeeds. Each stanza is packed with meaning; yet the effect of the whole is simple when one is really looking for the truth. Mrs. Eddy had a high regard for the value of verse as a form of writing, so high a regard for it that she maintained in her own writing of poetry an exact metaphysical diction equal to that of her prose. The exact statement of what the divine Mind knows must be the ideal in all writing. Thus, though one may most often do well to use prose, if he does write verse he must do so with quiet sureness that the divine Mind alone uses the true language.

The work of each one, then, is simply to express the divine Mind. As one proves what this Mind is and how it acts, one's whole language is sure to show forth more and more of the true idea. An attempt to copy what someone else has said will never suffice, however, to prove God's boundless way of healing. The one divine Mind and its idea is the only real pattern. How this Mind and idea must be applied to take the place of every mere seeming is an endless subject for clear speaking and clear writing, at the right time and in the right way. Each one must know for himself that his every word is a message of healing for the blessing of all, when it is inspired by Truth. As Mrs. Eddy says on page 454 of Science and Health, "Love for God and man is the true incentive in both healing and teaching. Love inspires, illumines, designates, and leads the way. Right motives give pinions to thought, and strength and freedom to speech and action." This, of course, is the kind of language that heals.

Among the Churches

Current Notes

Cincinnati, Ohio.—Members of Second Church of Christ, Scientist, have given their approval of plans for the construction of a meeting place at the southwest corner of Clifton and Probasco Avenues, opposite the northern end of the University of Cincinnati, work on which is to be started in the fall. Ground for the improvement, 120 by 200 feet, the latter being the frontage on Probasco Avenue, was obtained several months ago. The building is to stand back 70 feet from Clifton Avenue, and toward the rear there will be an approach to a parking space for automobiles. The auditorium, with the balcony, will have a seating capacity of approximately one thousand, and the Sunday school will have accommodations for eight hundred persons. The building is to have a frontage along Clifton Avenue of 90 feet.

The Lectures

CHICAGO, ILL. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Miss Ella D. Schindler, who said in part:—

It has been truly said that the greatest thing in the world is Love; and the Scriptures tell us that the effect of this Love is peace. The world has sought to attain these priceless gifts through countless avenues by material means, but it has failed. It has failed because it is impossible to attain either without an intelligent understanding of God.

Christian Science reveals to the world a God who is Love; whose boundless wisdom and intelligence are available at all times and in every circumstance of our lives,—a God at hand and not afar off.

LEOMINSTER, MASS. (Society).—Lecturer introduced by Albert W. Hall, who said in part:—

Many of us have sought for years a solution of the problem of our life and its relation to God. We have asked certain questions of the exponents of the old theologies and have received vague and unsatisfactory answers. Only in the study of the Science of Christianity have logical, convincing answers to our questions been given. Many have applied to the physicians for help for mind and body, only to be told finally that there was no cure for their ailments. But in the study of Christian Science and with the aid of its practitioners, complete healing of these same cases has been found. Many of us, in our search for truth, have wandered among the isms of to-day and have found nothing but this—theories that appear beautiful, but only theories; for they all lack the practical, vital, essential help that Christian Science gives us in even the smallest details of our everyday life.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Miss Bertha L. Babcock, who said in part:—

Long ago as shepherds watched their flocks by night on the hills of Judea a wondrous message came to the world, a message of good tidings of great joy which was for all people. To-day Christian Science brings to all people the good tidings of the ever present Christ, Truth, able to deliver us from all sorrow and sickness and sin. In the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, we read on page 332, "Christ is the true idea voicing good, the divine message from God to men speaking to the human consciousness." This divine word speaks to you and to me and to all mankind, and as the power of the Christ is demonstrated in the healing of our human needs, our grateful hearts echo the chorus of olden time, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

HAMBURG, GERMANY (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Paul Thiele, who said in part:—

To-day for the first time our church has the pleasure of seeing here a lecturer of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, Boston, U.S.A. We thought that we ought to invite every one to it and permit all to participate in it: in the first place because Christian Science is relatively little known here in Germany; secondly, because many erroneous ideas have circulated regarding Christian Science and its teaching; and, lastly, because many seekers for the truth would come, and a good seed might fall on fruitful ground.

In Germany Christian Science is comparatively little known. To be sure there are a number of churches here—the largest in Berlin—but what do these few churches with their adherents signify in comparison with the hundreds of thousands of adherents who are spread over the whole earth! And what blessings proceed from them! And who are the adherents of this church? Not religious fanatics who have agreed upon a dogma, but people whose lives Christian Science has entered at a fortunate moment to free them of some evil, whether it be of mental discord, or a physical affliction, or other inharmonious conditions. They are people who put into practice this practical, daily applicable Christianity, who are thankful to have found their God, and who regard Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, with reverence. The aim of the Scientist is to know the truth and to be freed thereby. The way is known, much has been accomplished, and the goal is clearly visible.

KALAMAZOO, MICH. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Mrs. J. M. Bach, who said in part:—

It is an undeniable fact that the world never stood in greater need of healing than at the present time. You well know how inadequate have been the efforts of material medicine to eradicate disease and suffering from the earth. From the standpoint of the ordinary physician, the list of diseases to which mortal flesh is heir, has increased rather than diminished—and yet the Bible tells us of a God "Who healeth all thy diseases." Christian Scientists are acquainting themselves with that God. To them there is no incurable disease, no inevitable suffering; and great numbers of men and women are demonstrating this fact in the world to-day.

The Kalamazoo Times.

COLUMBIA CITY, IND. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Mrs. Frank Briggs, who said in part:—

As citizens of the world to-day we are all striving for a higher good than has ever yet been reached by mankind. In our effort for the attainment of our ideals we have invariably found our human theories faulty, inadequate. We might say in Bible language: "For to will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good I find not." Christian Science rising above the physical into the metaphysical comes with Love's message revealing to us the truth of infinite Mind, making possible to-day the attainment of all good—even more than we have ever dared to hope for.

The Post.

MOBILE, ALA. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Israel Pickens, who said in part:—

In the gospel of John the truth that Christ Jesus proclaimed to the world is referred to as a light that "shineth in darkness." The Master indeed bore witness unto this light; and it was his spiritual understanding of the truth about God and man that enabled him to awaken the sinner, to heal the sick, and to raise the dead. He plainly taught that humanity could, and would, come into the same understanding of truth. He said, "If ye continue in my word... ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

Christian Science is nothing more nor less than this selfsame freedom-giving truth about God and man. Its teachings, when understood and properly applied, are accomplishing the same works of healing sickness and saving from sin that were known to, and practiced by, the primitive Christians.

ST. LOUIS, MO. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Robert A. Silliman, who said in part:—

In his second letter to Timothy the apostle Paul writes: "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, throughly furnished unto all good works." And in Psalms we read, "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty."

Christian Scientists are learning to regard these as postulatory statements and to expect, in their everyday experience, to realize the truth therein declared; that is to say, by reason of diligent study of the Scriptures under the light of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, they are becoming so acquainted with God and man's relation to Him that they are enabled to place their dependence on God as the Lord, the ever present and controlling authority, and are thereby finding themselves fixed, eternally established, under the care of our omniscient Father, the only cause and creator.

TUCSON, ARIZ. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by F. E. Gerlach, who said in part:—

Christian Science is a practical religion. It interprets the Bible for us, and shows us man's relationship to God. It is a religion that can be used by the business man as well as the workingman; in fact, it makes no difference who you are or what your calling in life may be. Christian Science when spiritually understood can be demonstrated to meet the needs, whatever they may be.

PRETORIA, TRANSVAAL, SOUTH AFRICA (Society).—Lecturer introduced by Rendle Carl Leathem, who said in part:—

The subject of the lecture, which we are to have the privilege of listening to this evening, is one which has been of interest throughout all ages; for the words "Christian Science" may be interpreted as "exact knowledge of the Christ," of "the way, the truth, and the life," and you will agree that all thoughtful men and women of all times have earnestly desired this exact knowledge of the way of life, of spiritual truth, of the true relationship between God and man.

Mary Baker Eddy in her wonderful book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," says on page 313, "Jesus of Nazareth was the most scientific man that ever trod the globe;" and as we study his life, we see that he ever used an exact knowledge with authority, without hesitation, which made him master of sin, disease, death, and even of what are usually described as the laws of nature. And our Master plainly stated that his true disciples, those who believed on him, would do the same and even greater works than he, and his whole teaching shows us that it would only be through spiritual, and not material, knowledge that these greater works would be performed.

Christian Science in the short period of about fifty years has spread over the whole civilized world, and there are two reasons which might be given in explanation of this: that its teaching is purely spiritual, and that it proves its truth by its works, in the same manner as did our great Master.

Thousands are everywhere testifying to the victory over sin and all manner of disease in their own experience through Christian Science, to the banishment of fear and want, to protection in time of danger, and to a new appreciation of that most precious of all books, the Bible, and the object of the lecture this evening is that those desirous of these and similar blessings may learn that they are available for them, both here and now.

CLINTON, MASS. (Society).—Lecturer introduced by E. R. B. Allardice, who said in part:—

In these trying times when the whole world appears in a state of turmoil due to the seeming ravages of sin, disease, strife, and jealousy; when the old, accepted doctrines, creeds, and systems fail to satisfy or bring relief, Christian Science, with its application of the teachings of Jesus, is proving that it can and does solve these perplexing problems. This proof stands as an accomplished fact, attested by its millions of adherents in every corner of the civilized globe.

Speaking of the light which the healings in Christian Science reveal, Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, says in our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," on page 347, "Christ, as the spiritual or true idea of God, comes now as of old, preaching the gospel to the poor, healing the sick, and casting out evils. Is it error which is restoring an essential element of Christianity,—namely, apostolic, divine healing? No; it is the Science of Christianity which is restoring it, and is the light shining in darkness, which the darkness comprehends not."

FORT SMITH, ARK. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Mrs. W. G. Koch, who said in part:—

There is one thing, I am sure, about which we are all of one mind—and that is in our desire to be rid of whatever disturbs us; whatever seems to rob us of peace of mind or peace of body, be it sorrow, sin, sickness, fear, worry, discouragement—whatever it may be, we are all anxious to be free from it. Now Christian Science frees us from such conditions because it teaches us the truth about them, the truth that they are not of God, hence they are not true nor real, despite how very real they may seem to our human sense. We are subordinate alone to our Maker, and His law is a law of Love, a law of infinite good. Now if we are paying the penalty of a belief in a false law, this penalty can be removed by learning the truth,—that there is in reality but one law, the law of God. Christian Science comes with the truth about God and man, and frees man from any false belief in a power apart from God, good.

The Fort Smith Times Record.

PORTLAND, ORE. (Second Church).—Lecturer introduced by F. Elmo Robinson, who said in part:—

The great conflict which has been going on in universal human thought during the past few years, is not, in the final analysis, a conflict between nations or individuals, or groups of individuals, but between law and lawlessness; the question being, Shall law and order, based upon some adequate sense of Principle, prevail, or shall the lawless, self-destructive qualities of the carnal mind supersede a true sense of law?

Christian Science stands for law and order. Mrs. Eddy, writing of this period on page 96 of Science and Health, has said: "During this final conflict, wicked minds will endeavor to find means by which to accomplish more evil; but those who discern Christian Science will hold crime in check. They will aid in the ejection of error. They will maintain law and order, and cheerfully await the certainty of ultimate perfection."—The Spectator.

KOKOMO, IND. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by James C. Finney, who said in part:—

What is the supreme good? The Christian Scientist answers that to know God is this good. Jesus said, "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." That Christian Science teaches this correct knowledge of God is proved by its works,—by healing the sick man and the sinning in obedience to the divine command of Jesus of Nazareth, "Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils: freely ye have received, freely give."

Testimonies of Healing

Love and gratitude for Christian Science have led me to write this testimony, trusting that any one experiencing similar conditions may read and profit. When I was a child my mother passed on as the result of tuberculosis, and two years later my brother followed. I was a delicate child, and seemed to inherit my mother's tendencies. Relatives and friends believed that I would eventually have the same disease. As I grew into womanhood the belief of heredity developed. Each spring I would have a total breakdown and a cough lasting for months. I tried different remedies, but finally our family physician found my left lung affected. I was finally somewhat relieved and discontinued the treatment he had recommended, but the evidence of heredity remained. Each year I experienced the same conditions.

In the spring of 1914 a neighbor whom I had never met called upon me on business, and each time she came I was sick. She expressed so much love that I looked forward to her visits. Our conversation drifted toward religion. From childhood I have been interested in church work, was at the time a Sunday school teacher in a Baptist church, but never heard any one quote Scripture as she did. She frequently left a Sentinel for me to read, and when she went away for the summer she lent me a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. I began reading the book and became interested in its religious teachings. I was under the doctor's care, spending my time lying in the hammock, wrapped in a heavy bath robe, the hot summer's sun shining on me. I enjoyed reading and resting, and by the time I finished the book I was up and about my housework, with interest I had not experienced for some time, and was healed, although it was not until the following winter that I fully realized the belief of heredity had entirely disappeared.

In the fall an abscess formed on my face, which was very painful. I called in the doctor and after I had suffered with it for a month he lanced it. The swelling did not go down as it should, and he said I might expect such abscesses to form often. He mentioned other things I might look for, which made me quite unhappy. As I passed the home of my friend who had previously shown so much love, I decided to call on her, and after spending a pleasant afternoon with her, promised I would visit her church. I went to the Christian Science church on the following Sunday. The Lesson-Sermon was on "Truth." The golden text was, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." I realized then that this was what I had looked for all my life, and became interested at once. In March an abscess began to form again and I called on a Christian Science practitioner. The abscess broke without any of the discomfort which I had before experienced and I have not had any return. In the spring of 1918 I had a cough and used the understanding I had of Science as best I could, but there was a condition surrounding me I could not seem to clear my thought of; so the cough developed into pleurisy, and my heart and lung were affected. The pain was intense and I could not stand up straight. I called in a practitioner and realized the healing at her first visit, although it was three weeks before it was manifested on the body. I have never felt any of the pains which follow that disease. The spiritual uplifting I received during convalescence was wonderful and I am deeply grateful for that experience. I greatly desired to pay the practitioner for her loving help but could not see my way clear to do so. Realizing that God is the source of supply, I was very unexpectedly called by a friend to assist him at his place of business during his wife's absence. I accepted, and rejoiced to know that the opportunity had come for me to recompense the practitioner for her work.

During the six years I have been interested in Christian Science I have been healed of many physical complaints; milk leg from which I had suffered for fourteen years gradually disappeared, also headaches, nervous stomach trouble, and rheumatism. My disposition has also changed; instead of a worrisome, self-pitying, unhappy woman I am happy and well, desiring that all shall see the blessings I have received. For the physical healings I am deeply grateful, but the spiritual uplift is far more to me than all else. I am grateful to all who have so kindly helped me. Only by my living can I hope to show my gratitude.

With a heart full of thankfulness for many blessings I send this testimony. Two and a half years ago Christian Science was brought to my notice by a dear friend, who lent me her copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy. I was then a most discouraged and unhappy woman, not from ill health, but from mental worry owing to the apparent loss of all that had formerly seemed essential to my life and its happiness. I had for years been indifferent to religion, though brought up by deeply religious parents in a denominational faith. I had always been interested in reading any books on religion, but had never derived any conviction or comfort from them. Without any idea of experiencing a change in my mental condition I started to read Science and Health, but after a short time, while I was still reading the first chapter, on Prayer, and honestly trying to apply its teaching, I found that, almost imperceptibly, my whole outlook was brightening. My duty in life seemed to lie plainly before me, and with the realization of that, came wonderful peace and happiness. With increased opportunity for study, and, above all, the regular reading of the Bible-Lessons, I find the beautiful teachings of Christian Science unfolding to me, and I am learning to make the Bible my guide for right living.

Many demonstrations have added to my happiness. Several minor ailments have been overcome, and a great sense of fear and loneliness has disappeared. I should like to add here that the grateful testimony of a fellow student from a Mexican farm, which appeared some months back in a Sentinel, encouraged me to send this. Last year I was able to demonstrate over seasickness in going to and returning from England. Health and happiness bespeak my gratitude to God for His infinite blessings, to our inspired Leader for her unselfish life and for her writings, and to the Christian Science Publishing Society for the periodicals, including the Quarterly, which enable isolated students like myself to keep in touch with the church service and the vast Christian Science movement.—(Mrs.) Beryl Rosa Ware, Olympia, Brazil, South America.

Gratitude for Christian Science and for our dear Leader, who so faithfully walked with God that she was the channel for His revelation of the truth to this age, leads me to add my testimony to those being given for the encouragement and hope of struggling humanity. Through the teachings of Christian Science it has become clear to me that, in spite of trials and rather startling events in childhood and young womanhood, Principle has ever been leading me forward out of false beliefs, into the light, and that the light will grow brighter "unto the perfect day" of understanding.

When I was nine years old a fall upon three granite steps caused me to be confined to my bed for a year. This seemed to bring about discordant internal conditions which produced continuous pain and suffering. Years of medical treatment, three operations, electrical and serum treatments, failed to heal, and five surgeons conferring could find no remedy but said the condition must be cured or I would not live long. About a year after this a friend from California visited me, whose thought manifested such a change through the study of Christian Science that I resolved to find out what Mrs. Eddy really did, and what Science and Health contained. Not in any way did I connect one thought of it with myself or my condition, and expected nothing from it. I was not acquainted with any Christian Scientists and never had heard one word of good about the cause. Having borrowed first "The Life of Mary Baker Eddy" by Sibyl Wilbur and then "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy from a public library, I became intensely interested in the reading. At the end of three months that book had so changed my thought of God, of life, and of my true self that the healing was complete, and strength rapidly increasing. It did not seem possible and was almost unbelievable, but it was true, and five years full of activity have proved its reality. Many healings have followed this, more in the line of purifying thought than of physical ills. I also rejoice that my husband finds Christian Science practical and available for his needs, and healings in business life have proved its truth to him. Our two children have received wonderful healings also, and the fact that they are building upon the rock, Christ, is bound to give them large blessings as the truth unfolds to them.

Mrs. Eddy gives us these encouraging words in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 341), "First purify thought, then put thought into words, and words into deeds; and after much slipping and clambering, you will go up the scale of Science to the second rule, and be made ruler over many things."

(Mrs.) HARRIETTE S. FROST, West Newton, Mass.

About five years before learning of Christian Science I suffered from stomach trouble, and what misery and fear attended this disease no one knows better than I. Many physicians were consulted and finally a stomach specialist whose constant care I was under for three years. Strict diet, stomach pumps, and medicine were then my companions. Pills in one pocket, powders in another, and bottles of liquid medicine at home, together with my watch keeping time that I might know when I was to swallow them, made up my daily equipment. Often I would stop in drug stores to bathe my face and wrists, and on several occasions I had to ask strangers to get off the street cars with me and help me home. With much unpleasantness and distress I lived from day to day.

One morning while on the way to my office, a gentleman spoke to me of Christian Science, and that evening when I told my wife of the conversation with him she became exceedingly interested and we decided to go to a Wednesday evening meeting to hear some testimonies, but I declared that for my part it would only be for spiritual reasons and not for healing. About two weeks later we visited the church and were much impressed with the service and testimonies. When leaving the church I took a Sentinel and Journal from a table containing free literature. From the moment I commenced reading, I knew I had found what I was in search of, for I always felt and knew that "God is love." The next day while at my office, with the voice of Truth still whispering to me, I was led to telephone to my wife to learn the name of a Christian Science practitioner, and that evening on my way home I made my first visit and had my first treatment. I know that it was an instantaneous healing, for until the next week when I again called on this practitioner I felt no symptoms of my trouble. I told her that I felt better, and she said that I was healed. Here is where I make a frank confession. If I had not realized how impolite it was, I know that I would have laughed at her,—to think of three years under a specialist with no results and only one Christian Science treatment and healed,—but I was healed. It is over four years ago and I have not had the slightest return of this trouble.

Many other healings have been accomplished. I am thankful to God for this wonderful truth and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for her untiring effort in placing this gift within reach of all mankind.

HAROLD L. HILTON, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Many blessings have come into my life through the understanding of God as taught in Christian Science. One of the physical difficulties overcome was an ulcerated sore throat, with which I suffered for some years before taking up the study of Christian Science. This manifestation completely disappeared in the light of a clearer knowledge of God and of man in God's image and likeness, as shown in Science and Health, which is indeed a "Key to the Scriptures."

I wish also to express my gratitude for and appreciation of our international daily newspaper, The Christian Science Monitor, which since its inception has done so much to heal the thought of the world, lifting up a standard for the people in every branch—news, editorial, advertising. The efficacy and healing of its advertising has been wonderfully proved in my experience. When leaving business college, the problem of seeking a situation arose, and I turned to the Monitor, expressing my need through its advertising columns. My obedience in turning to this channel our Leader provided was abundantly rewarded. Through yielding to the requirement in Malachi 3:10, God's promise therein was fulfilled: "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

Hoping that this testimony may be a help to some one, as others have been to me, I gladly submit the following. Being a normal, healthy, happy child I was practically without fear and as I grew to womanhood I often wondered why we could not use the simple religion which Jesus had taught. I read the Bible in a desultory fashion to see how the lives of the people of that time differed from the lives of the people of my day and concluded that they were not admirable and would not bear imitating. I did not realize until I studied Christian Science that the Bible was a record of their struggles to overcome materiality. Now I find the Bible full of interest and instruction.

In my early womanhood I joined a denominational church, and finding it did not meet my practical needs I delved a little into theosophy and also new thought but saw almost at once that they would not be satisfying to me. When Christian Science was first brought into my home by my sister, I was immersed in club work, and although I read the textbook clandestinely and knew it was what I had been seeking, I wanted to finish the work on hand before taking it up seriously, not realizing my great need of healing. While on my way to a club meeting in Pasadena one day I turned my ankle and, according to the two osteopaths who faithfully treated me for several months, a ligament in my hip was loosened, which caused me intense suffering and lameness so that I was obliged to use crutches during all of that time. Finally, becoming thoroughly discouraged I told my sister I was afraid I would be lame for life and asked for treatment in Christian Science. After two treatments she asked me to throw away my crutches, which I did and I have never needed them again, although I had tried many times previously to walk without them, but without success. I was slow, however, to acknowledge that my healing was complete; in fact, I did not see how it could have been done so easily. That healing was over eight years ago and since that time I have known no other religion or medicine, for there is no other.

I have been, almost unconsciously, healed of what the doctors had pronounced an enlarged liver, intestinal catarrh, a leakage of the heart, and tonsillitis; I was also released from a heavy, past due mortgage without great loss to either party, simply by knowing the truth as taught in our textbook. I realized after I began the study of Christian Science that each of the Bible promises was preceded by a condition which required effort on my part, and that God's promises never fail. If healing does not come at once the fault is often in ourselves, due to our wrong thinking. I am grateful not only for my own healings but doubly so for the privilege of passing this truth on to the many who have inquired of me.

It was in the year 1914 that I took up the study of Christian Science for physical healing. In one treatment I was healed of bronchial asthma on account of which I had gone west, but had experienced only temporary relief. I had had the grippe five times, which left me in a condition of general breakdown. Not only asthma, but lumbago and rheumatism of long standing also left after several treatments, and the reading of Science and Health and other writings of Mrs. Eddy, together with the Lessons in the Quarterly. Errors too numerous to mention have dropped off one by one, including a disagreeable skin disease which the doctors called eczema. An abnormal growth that seemed to start from a wart and grew to be as large as the end of my thumb dissolved into its native nothingness, for which I cannot find words to express my thankfulness. I am also grateful for the spiritual benefits received, and am so thankful that Mrs. Eddy was faithful to the great truth that God revealed to her, and that she built so firmly on the rock, Christ, which nothing can overthrow. I just want so to live this truth that my life may prove my sincerity.

"Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house." The above words came to me very forcibly on New Year's day, and I remembered that I had never expressed my gratitude to God and to our Leader through the Christian Science periodicals, though I have been so often healed while reading the testimonies of others.

About seventeen years ago I came to Christian Science for physical healing only. In my first treatment I was relieved of a backache from which I had suffered from childhood. My healing from other ills came very slowly, for which I am grateful, though at times I was almost discouraged. As I was relieved so quickly in my first treatment I expected other ills just to fall away, but in this I was disappointed and not until my attention was attracted by the Scriptural verse, "But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you," did I know what I needed. When I began to seek to know more about God I began to experience permanent healing. A few years before I came to Science my father suffered financial reverses and passed on soon afterwards. My mother was delicate and I was overwhelmed with a sense of care and responsibility, and so while quite a young school teacher I was broken in health and my nerves shattered. It was then I decided to ask for help in Christian Science and I have been helped physically, mentally, financially, and spiritually. My nerves are healed and Science has been a wonderful help to me in my work as a teacher.

I am most grateful for my spiritual healing, as in my younger days I was very fond of material pleasures and was not at all religiously inclined. Since coming into Science the material pleasures mean absolutely nothing to me and my greatest desire is to know more about God and to be able to help others as I have been helped.

(Miss) Elizabeth McKnight, Quincy, Ill.

For a long time I have wanted to give my testimony of gratitude for the blessings I have received through the study and application of Christian Science. After my mother was healed by reading "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, I became curious to know what it was that healed her. I began to read the book and after reading for some time I discovered that a goiter on my neck (for which medical aid could do nothing) had disappeared. An organic disease, which had been a source of much suffering for many years, was also destroyed. Nervousness, a tendency to morbidness and fear, criticism, and faultfinding have been overcome in a very great measure through the understanding that God is Love.

I am indeed grateful for my physical healings but more grateful for a spiritual understanding of what God truly is. I am grateful to God, to Christ Jesus our Way-shower, and to our Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, and I am daily praying for that Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus."

(Mrs.) Stella Whiting, Maplewood, Mo.

I should like to express my gratitude for all the blessings that have come into my life through Christian Science. I have had many proofs during the last three and one-half years of the efficacy of Christian Science to heal both mentally and physically. That our every need is met even before we know we have the need, I proved not long ago, as the following incident will show. A short time ago a practitioner was chatting with my oldest boy and me when the subject of accidents was introduced. Very clearly and very lovingly the practitioner explained to my son that there are no accidents in Mind, and as the explanation proceeded I seemed to get a wonderfully clear glimpse of that fact. The proof that I had done so came later, for soon afterwards I was going down some awkward steps and slipped. Somehow I got jammed between the steps and the wall. I felt that I was badly hurt and called to my boys to know the truth! The elder one came to my help and I got to an armchair with an effort, as every movement was agony. He also got me "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." I read one sentence and fainted. As I came to, the sentence I had heard that morning came to me again, and at that moment my hip, which was evidently dislocated, gently slipped back into its place. With the realization of this the most wonderful sense of peace came over me. I sat reading for a little while, then I got up and walked out of the room very much better except for an enormous bruise. The hip turned black and blue, but even that disappeared within two or three days.

The spiritual uplift one gets after a manifestation of the divine power such as this is wonderful, and one feels as if one could remove mountains if necessary. I am very thankful to God for His ever present help and to our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for discovering this great truth. I am grateful, too, for the Sunday school where the children are taught to conquer their fears and to know that they have an ever present help in time of need.

(Mrs.) Mary Critchlow, Southsea, England.

The first Sunday in July, 1919, proved to be an eventful day in my life. That day I attended my first Christian Science service. Up to that time I always had a longing to be good. I went to that service, which since has meant so much to me, with hatred in my heart toward close relations who I thought had shown me injustice, ingratitude, and persecution for years of self-sacrifice and devotion. I shall never forget that service; one of the hymns sung was one that my dear mother used to sing around the house when I was a boy. It brought tears to my eyes, tears of sorrow for those who had misunderstood me, tears of joy to think how proud my dear mother would be to see her boy singing the praises of God. I took a Journal from the rack in the church corridor and read it studiously. The next Wednesday evening I attended the testimony meeting, and there got the needed help. A good brother got up who had been placed in similar circumstances, and through his grateful testimony of God's goodness, I came to the conclusion that if my friends too had found "the pearl of great price" the evil thoughts would leave them. I at once felt sorry for them, and from that day, thank God, have tried to demonstrate to them by my actions and kindness what it means to realize God's ever presence.

When I wrote of my good fortune to a sister in England, I found to my great surprise and pleasure that an older sister, with whom I had not corresponded for thirty-one years, had found the truth seven years ago and was a practitioner. I knew I had found a friend. I wrote to her immediately and have received inspiring and helpful letters from her. Having no friends in Christian Science I was placed in a position where materially I had everything to discourage me, but I thank God now that He gave me a chance to work out my own salvation. I look upon life differently and instead of my old friends laughing at me, as I once thought they would, God has enabled me to demonstrate kindness to such an extent that they appreciate it and have often spoken of what a different man I am. During my earnest study of this ever satisfying truth about God, I often wondered if when error in the form of sickness presented itself I would be brave enough to depend absolutely on God for help. This I regret to say somewhat worried me as I had a very humble position, daily necessities used up all my income, and I often thought if I got sick the quicker I got well the better, whether it was through the drug store or God. I can now see that evil was trying to tempt me. Well, at last it came, in the form of a very severe attack of lumbago. I had no money so I could not afford to be idle, but I thought, "Choose you this day whom ye will serve." When I gave up work I rushed to a practitioner before I changed my mind. And instead of his asking me if my father died of kidney trouble and all the other foolish questions I had been asked by doctors, which would naturally cause a man to think himself dying, the last words he said to me, smilingly, when I left him were, "Put on the whole armour of God," and I started in to obey him. The old enemy hated to leave and I began to think there was something wrong and found I was not trusting God as I should. I was worrying about getting back to work, but by reading Science and Health I overcame that, for I thought, "I will fear no evil: for thou art with me." During these days I received what I would have thought in the past a very provoking message, but my thoughts were of God's love toward me, and I wrote a kind letter in reply. After delivering that letter I went to a lunch room, and sat down with great difficulty, but instantly I felt as if some heavy weight had been taken from my back. I was healed. I returned to my room somewhat bewildered and sat down and arose several times to see if it was true. Now I know God is my ever present help in time of trouble, and thanks to Christian Science I have found out we cannot compromise with worry and expect God's protection, as the very fact of our worrying proves we are not depending absolutely on our only Comforter. I thank God for this wonderful healing. I thank Him that the truth found me when I was hungry for divine companionship, and thank Him for blessing this world with such a noble, unassuming, and devoted Christian as our dear, beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy. Knowing how error tries to discourage beginners, I hope this will help other young students.

Frank E. Huckle, Boston, Mass.

I wish to give thanks for Christian Science. About eight years ago I had violent toothache. A friend advised me to have the tooth extracted, but I felt I must stand for Christian Science, and silently declared that God being Spirit, His child is not made up of matter nerves. I was healed, and have not had toothache since. It was some years later before I knew the extent of the healing, and one day I realized that the belief in nerves as intelligent and able to control man was in a large measure destroyed.

For divine protection during air raids I am very grateful. They were just opportunities to prove God's allness. I am very thankful to our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for giving to us the spiritual interpretation of the Scriptures, so that we are able to read the Bible aright, which enables us to separate the unreal from the real.—(Miss) Rosina E. Hargreaves, Lower Halling, Kent, England.

I have not words at my command to express my gratitude for the benefit Christian Science has been to me, and for what it is doing for me every day. I have been cured of severe headaches, from which I suffered all my life until given the blessed assurance that God is the only source of health. I was cured several years ago of a lameness caused by a fall. A physician told me it was very probable I would never be well again, but with the help of a practitioner I was entirely relieved in a very short time, also of erysipelas on my face. I am most truly thankful for the spiritual uplift I am gaining each day from the study of Science and Health, and from reading the Journal, the Sentinel, and the Monitor, all of which I have in my home. I am thankful to God for my many blessings and to Mrs. Eddy who has made the Bible and its wonderful lessons so clear.

Signs of the Times

[Richard C. Cabot, M.D., in "A Layman's Handbook of Medicine"]

The visceral psychoneuroses are very common. The medical profession has a considerable part in forming them. We doctors sometimes quite unintentionally direct the patient's attention altogether too much upon one or another of his bodily organs. All hygiene has this danger. To be conscious even of our health is, I think, a diseased state. We ought to be thinking about our job and not about our health or our diseases.

Half of any general practitioner's ordinary work is concerned with some type of psychoneurosis; not half that the neurologists do, but half that all of the doctors in the country are doing to-day, is to treat psychoneurotics. That is important in many ways. It seems to me most important, because very few of the doctors have ever been trained to treat a psychoneurotic; very few have any interest in it. The attitude of many a doctor is expressed in his desire to run out the side door when one of these patients appears at the front. . . .

The treatment of this trouble is real life, . . . in the sense of doing whatever one can to get the person back into normal relations with human beings, with duty, and with God.

[Manufacturers Record]

Civilization is not the piling up of wealth for the few, the creation of a leisure class, but the building up of a state of society so desirable that the masses share in the fruits. If we can maintain our present system only by keeping locked in the twilight zone of poverty those who toil with their hands, then the system is not worth maintaining and the sooner we have done with it the better.

An age is dying. Sir Auckland Geddes is right; a realization of the hopelessness of mere existence has seized the minds of millions. And why? Because, we think, the triumphs and defeats of the last few years have taught them, as nothing else could have taught them, that much of the horror of life as they have known it is so unnecessary. They have learned, if we may be bold enough to say it, that they have groaned too often in squalor because the leadership which they have followed has been so puny and so futile.

[Paul S. Leinbach, D.D., editor, The Reformed Church Messenger]

There remain in every denomination to-day disciples of exclusiveness and intolerance, who believe that their fidelity to truth can be gauged by the vehemence and bitterness with which they hurl anathemas at all other believers whose interpretation differs from their own. They are the legitimate successors of the inquisitors, witch-burners, and heresy-hunters of bygone ages, and their greatest pride is in their loyalty to these ancestral tendencies. It is a part of an editor's spiritual discipline to read the organs of these isolated sectarians and yet maintain the integrity of his own faith in God and man.

[History of The Hebrew Commonwealth—Bailey and Kent]

The ultimate greatness of Moses rests not so much in what he accomplished as in what he was. It is his spiritual quality, rare in any day but unaccountable in that primitive epoch, that made him one of the few commanding figures of all time; it is his courage, his devotion, his wisdom, his unwavering trust in Jehovah. He was the first great prophet not only in Hebrew history but in world history, speaking out of personal knowledge of God his convictions about the divine will for man. Through this work as spokesman of Jehovah, as prophet of the unseen, he confirmed—one might almost say created—in the Hebrew race their marked capacity for religion. His absolute faith in the ability of Jehovah to lead his people into a "large place" inspired others with that faith. And the prophets of a later age, in picturing the glories of their Messianic deliverer, could think of no higher praise for him than to cause Moses to say in prophecy: "Jehovah your God shall raise up for you a prophet like me." He was indeed like a lofty mountain peak, to which men toiling in the valleys afar off lift their eyes to find inspiration and blessings in its loftiness and purity and majesty.

Letters of Appreciation

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. Extracts from such letters follow:

I WOULD just like to take this opportunity to tell you how much I value our daily paper and of the healing that is going on in my life through reading its pages. I am very grateful for the many and varied articles which appear, referring to my native country (England), and was especially glad to read the columns on the musical page the other day which spoke so much about Glastonbury, Somerset, it being only four miles from my home. A wonderful work this paper is doing. It is indeed a window through which its readers can see the world, and is surely doing its part in helping the nations understand each other.

WITH this letter I am sending you seventy-five cents (money order) for which kindly send one month's subscription to THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR to Mr. ———. I earned this myself. I am twelve years old. I love the MONITOR, especially the Children's Page, and the ———'s children say they do too, so please send it right away.

I TOO have great love and admiration for the MONITOR, but have been negligent in expressing it. This wonderful newspaper is our daily "mental food" and has brought healing and a world of knowledge to us. When in doubt in regard to our understanding of the seeming problems confronting the world to-day we turn to the MONITOR for information, and by learning the truth therein contained we are able to think rightly on the subject, and in this way do our part in helping solve the problem.

"What I say unto you I say unto all, WATCH." Jesus

VOLUME XXII AUGUST 21, 1920 NUMBER 51

Laying Up Treasures

ALFRED F. BLUNDELL

IN the sixth chapter of Matthew, Jesus is reported as saying, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal: but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal." The meaning of the word "treasures" depends in a sense upon the interpretation of the individual to whom the advice appeals and upon the point of view from which it appeals to him. Our Master certainly could not have referred to, or had in mind, any so-called treasures consisting of material things, because on another occasion, when referring to such material things, he states that, from a certain point of view, "it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God."

It seems, therefore, that the first thing to be done to understand how to comply with the instruction given, is to get a clear definition of the real meaning of treasure from the Master's point of view. Before we can define anything it must become the subject of our thought, and the conclusion that we reach determines to us what the object defined will be. The generally accepted meaning of the word "treasure" is, that which is much to be desired and which has a relatively great value. Those desiring it the most will think the most about it and think in such a way as to give activity to what they consider will be the best means to acquire the object of their desire.

Proportionably to the value they have placed on this object, will be the activity to acquire it, as indicated in the same chapter of Matthew, "For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." The student of Christian Science is taught that the beginning of everything, as phenomenon or as fact, is mental. This is surely logical and easy to understand, for to cease to think would be to cease to be conscious. This brings one to the place where it is well to know how and what to think, and it is here that Christianity, as understood in the teachings of Christian Science, gives us the key to the situation, tells us what to desire most, how to secure the object of this desire, and how to increase our stock in this direction. If the manifestation of activity on our part is constant and energetic, and we are sincerely using our time and opportunity to think God's thoughts, we are laying up treasures in heaven. Furthermore, we have been gradually acquiring a habit which, as expressed in a human way, becomes second nature, or to be exact, is divinely natural. The efforts which we have put forth become our spiritual capital, and we find that in proportion to our past endeavors we can draw on this capital at such times as the claims or beliefs of a false consciousness assert themselves and try to demand recognition. If we have been faithful we have enough understanding to meet these demands, and each time we meet them in this way, instead of having lost any of our treasure, we find we have added to it.

If the false illusions, superstitions, and errors of the past or present mortal consciousness, either through indolence, ignorance, or willingness, have rendered us liable to all kinds of accumulated false claims of debt, then, as the untangling of the snarl goes on, they seem to become due and, like demand notes, from time to time are presented for payment. We may wonder when the obligations were incurred and be indignant at the falsehood of their claims, but nevertheless they have to be met and met promptly, or a bad experience is in store for us. It behooves us, therefore, to have a good spiritual bank account available, so that we shall not have to lose time running around borrowing from our neighbors, for it is quite possible that the time may come when we shall have some trouble in finding one who can furnish just what is necessary to meet the immediate demand; and meanwhile we seemingly must remain in prison until the claim is met, when if we had been more obedient and faithful we could have taken advantage of Christian Science in its fullness and efficacy as an immediate and present liberator and Savior.

A number of years ago the writer had a sudden accident, and the belief in heredity presented itself for recognition, and he seemed to be helpless to meet it effectively. A practitioner from whom he had always received great help and encouragement and with whom he was on terms of intimate friendship, was called upon. When the help was asked for, the friend made a very frank and positive reply: "So you have not enough spiritual capital on hand to meet your obligations and you have come to me for some of mine, and of course I will give you the best I have, but do you not think it might be a good thing to try and keep a substantial balance to your credit, knowing, as you do, that claims of all kinds of error are liable to be made at any time and that it is a good, convenient, businesslike, and scientific plan to be able to meet these claims promptly?" This, in the words of our Master, means, I think, to "agree with thine adversary quickly." The recognition of these conditions leads us to face our responsibilities bravely and fairly and helps us to know and understand that the remedy is in our own hands if we are faithful. Mrs. Eddy tells us on page 494 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" that "divine Love always has met and always will meet every human need," and the need will be met promptly if the stock of Love has been proved by the same faithful mental work for the spiritual that is required to secure any of the material conditions that seem desirable.

When we see to-day how much value is placed on systematic physical and material training to reach efficiency in a temporal, worldly way, we can catch a glimpse of what Paul meant when he said, "Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith." The doing of this gives us "grace," which one of our writers has defined as "the exercise of faith." This brings to us the realization of the truth of an old proverb, "Practice makes perfect," and it is fair to conclude that nothing else does. The right mental practice never leads to weariness or waste. It is always and under all conditions gain and greater efficiency. To "stand porter at the door of thought" (Science and Health, p. 392) institutes system and order in our lives and environment, eliminates all kinds of useless waste and unnecessary repetition of mental activity, and logically and reasonably leads us nearer to that "peace of God, which passeth all [human] understanding."

The presentation of the case up to this point might possibly seem to indicate a selfish ideal, but on page 206 of Science and Health our Leader says: "In the scientific relation of God to man, we find that whatever blesses one blesses all, as Jesus showed with the loaves and the fishes,—Spirit, not matter, being the source of supply." Furthermore those who have treasures laid up in heaven have the great privilege of being able to prove that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." As they give, their capacity to receive also increases and they will be led into complete possession of their heritage as "joint-heirs with Christ," as the children of God. Thus it naturally follows that to lay up treasures in heaven means to prove that heaven is the true consciousness of all rightness and may be experienced here and now.

The Unfolding Idea

MARY E. HARDY

MANY months ago the writer read from the pages of our Sentinel that we should learn to read The Christian Science Monitor as our Leader would read it. The words were hidden in the quiet sanctuary of thought, where with other rays of reflected light, they served as a nucleus for a better understanding of the mission of our periodicals as a whole. In the thin pamphlet, the first copy of our Christian Science Journal, we see the loving, undaunted courage of Mrs. Eddy, who gave to a sleeping world the awakening message of freedom which in its expansion has become a chronicle of healing activity. As a natural result of broadening idea a greater demand is met in fuller supply. The possibility of a weekly message is thus seen and also the necessity for an awakening responsibility for its protection. When divine Love gave us the Christian Science Sentinel, it brought with it its message, "What I say unto you I say unto all, Watch." We have each and all found that the admonition is most needed.

Mrs. Eddy first trod the path, and met and conquered the foe, which is ever attempting to turn aside the message of brotherly love and force mankind into still longer sojourn in Egypt. But the child has waxed strong. It has learned to translate its mother tongue, the language of Spirit, to its hungry and thirsty brother. The true idea continues then to unfold as Le Héraut de Christian Science and Der Herold der Christian Science. The writer has striven to make her own a fuller understanding of the steps necessarily taken against the aggressive enemies of divine Love's idea as unfolded to the world by each of our periodicals. It is a statement without dispute that our periodicals are bearing to sinful, sick, and suffering humanity Mrs. Eddy's conception of the healing and redemption of divine Love. Because this idea is above the clouds of error, it cannot be destroyed or lost. It has been and is safeguarded by her consecrated, unselfed daily giving of the bread of heaven for the salvation of the needy.

Each one who in gratitude has yearned to emulate her example, however meager the attempt, has to that degree progressed beyond mere faith in statements, which her giving made fact. If we have followed her footsteps as faithfully as she has followed the Christ, it is our privilege to discern how and why The Christian Science Monitor is one of her greatest gifts. Heading its editorial page we read, "First the blade, then the ear, then the full grain in the ear." Have we, in attempting to assimilate the metaphysical translation of the above statement, reached back of effect to cause? Before the blade there was the seed, the grain of truth expressing divine consciousness. We have each and all marveled at its living, loving, potent qualities, so vital that every crushing process, like the weight upon the yeast, only served to bring into expression its unquenchable source, the Love which never fails, but which rather, from the law of creative force, must ever unfold eternal identity. Spiritual vision revealed to Mrs. Eddy, the seer of this age, the trend of the world's thought and she was able to discern the mental hunger through "the things which do appear." So, as is consistent with her habit of obedience to divine Love's call, the mandate went forth from her abiding place in Truth and The Christian Science Monitor, the daily chronicle of the trend of human thought, was established, in the prevalent struggle to find a cleaner way of daily living. This gift was made in loving desire to help all and injure none.

We have seen that, because the idea is the clear reflection of the divine Mind, the mist of a false sense along so many phases of international activities vanishes, and an improved sense of government appears. We can but know that if we remain steadfastly true to the pattern given in the mount, the waterpots will overflow with the purity of right desire, and we shall find a waiting readiness to grasp the broader interpretation of law, which alone will repeat the miracle of Cana. Love's message has gone forth over continent and sea carrying to the earth's remotest spot the new-old message of "on earth peace, good will toward men,"—a message of peace because it no longer meets the world's error with error, but by the reflection of Principle the Christ-idea has dethroned the government of erring concepts in every line of the world's activities. The long cherished desire of our beloved Leader is accomplished. The Christian Science Monitor is sought for. Truth is leavening every avenue of human thought. If in the melting and purifying process those who desire to follow in the footsteps of our Leader find that they in turn must meet and conquer each element of so-called human will, there can follow only a song of praise in the inspiration of a higher conception of Love. In a deeper study of the definition of church, as given by Mrs. Eddy on page 583 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," the writer has found a fuller application of the law of supply in the command, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."

Understanding versus Belief

JESSIE M. CHANDLER

THE writer at one time thought that one having been taught by Christian parents since early childhood to believe in God, and being equipped with a college education, was fully prepared to meet every vicissitude of daily living. This was soon seen to be but a belief, which though faithfully relied upon and adhered to in a time of great need, failed to bring the desired help. This seeming failure showed clearly that something more than a college education and a belief in God was needed to accomplish healing. Then it was that these words from Paul's epistle to the Romans were recalled, "And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God."

The knowing that a fact could be proved, and the not having been able to prove this theory to one's own satisfaction therefore indicated that a belief is always dwelling in the realm of belief; whereas a fact is now, and always has been, dwelling in the realm of fact or Truth. Therefore a fact is knowable and must be known.

In college one learns when studying mathematics, that a belief in mathematics does not make one a mathematician. So in time of trouble one learns that a belief in God does not convey an understanding of God. With music it is the same. One learns that a belief in music does not make one a musician; but the love of music, coupled with an honest desire to become a musician, will enable one to become a musician. So it is with the individual who loves God and honestly desires to know Him rightly. He will be rightly guided to an understanding of God. When in college, one finds that through the study of mathematics one's belief about mathematics is changed to an understanding of mathematics, and consequently one finds himself a mathematician. So through the earnest study of the Bible in conjunction with "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, the writer did also find that a belief in God was corrected or transformed into an understanding of God, thus proving the truth of the apostle John's words, "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."

So to-day those who are believing in God simply because they have been taught to believe in Him are merely worshiping a preconceived concept of God, which is likely to be far from a true one. In the instance above related, it was an entirely false concept of God that was being worshiped. The true concept of God was gained through the study of Christian Science. Without a right understanding of God, one may be believing in God and still entertaining many very wrong beliefs, and be strangely perplexed to know just why God does not, or has not, healed some particular ailment; while at the same time believing that this same God whom one professes to love and worship has inflicted such suffering, or at least allowed the affliction.

From false beliefs, one and all, it is indeed high time to awake. One might ask, "Awake from what?" Is it not to awake from false belief about God and His created man and to see the wrongness of belief and behold the rightness of God and His creation? Would not the knowing of the rightness or goodness of God clearly indicate the rightness or goodness of man? And does not the knowledge of this awaken one into the glorious perception of man's oneness with God? It certainly does. One then finds the true God who is good and wholly good, and who has already created only that which is good. This understanding is gained through the study of Christian Science, and it certainly coincides with the Scriptures, which point to the fact that God's perfect creation coexists with its creator here and now; therefore it is not in need of being made over, neither is it far removed from daily living.

We are told in "Unity of Good" by Mary Baker Eddy (p. 46), "The scientific man and his Maker are here; and you would be none other than this man, if you would subordinate the fleshly perceptions to the spiritual sense and source of being." Mrs. Eddy also states in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 502), "There is but one creator and one creation." And again on page 555 of the above-named book she says, "Creation rests on a spiritual basis." These texts referred to so clearly indicate the true nature and character of creator and creation, which is not and never has been material. That which is and always has been spiritual cannot be material, although one may seem to be ignorantly entertaining a mortal material sense of that which is really spiritual. In the Bible we are told that "God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth."

Thus is one instructed in a true sense of things, by knowing that these statements are true, and because they are true man is thereby armed and equipped for living—eternal living. Through logical deduction, the belief that man is a material being is thus corrected, until one knows and understands that man is born of God, and is therefore spiritual. Being the offspring of God, the true man now reflects and expresses all that belongs to the Father. That which belongs to the Father rightly belongs to the child by reflection. This is indeed man's rightful heritage and it is not too good to be true.

Practical Religion

RICHARD HAWORTH

WHAT is religion? It is not a creed nor a pious belief. It is not something to separate us from our Maker or our fellow man. It is not something merely to console us in the seeming experiences of material existence, nor something to prepare us for a future heaven. It is not a vague abstraction. On the contrary, it is concrete reality, the understanding of our relation to God, dispelling fear and engendering trust in God, good, thereby enabling us to see human experience not so much as the outcome of what mortals do as of what they think, exemplifying Jesus' saying, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." In short, true religion takes earth to heaven and brings heaven to earth.

Jesus said, "The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do: for what things soever he doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise," signifying by this that man is not cause but effect,—the manifestation of the one perfect and infinite Mind or cause, God. The recognition of this destroys the belief in separation from God and enables us to see that man is the consequence of the great I AM, thereby destroying any false sense of responsibility and the fear of failure, and enabling us to grasp the meaning of the Biblical admonition, "Be still, and know that I am God." Divine law is always operating. There is nothing left undone. Wisdom is in all God's ways. To believe otherwise would be to belittle omnipotence. Beginning on page 19 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, we read as follows: "Jesus urged the commandment, 'Thou shalt have no other gods before me,' which may be rendered: Thou shalt have no belief of Life as mortal; thou shalt not know evil, for there is one Life,—even God, good. He rendered 'unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's; and unto God the things that are God's.' He at last paid no homage to forms of doctrine or to theories of man, but acted and spake as he was moved, not by spirits but by Spirit."

To endeavor to gain the approbation of humanity by conformity to material standards is futile and tends to degrade instead of uplift. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon," said Jesus, indicating the necessity of keeping thought in heaven, so to speak, thereby improving even one's concept of humanity; whereas to keep thought down on the low level of trying to please mortals usually ends in displeasure all around. Man is quite capable of doing and being all he was intended to do and be. He was never intended to be sick or sorry, surly or sinful. "His birthright," as Mrs. Eddy points out (Science and Health, p. 518), "is dominion, not subjection." Let us, then, emphasize this fact in our lives, remembering it is God working in us "both to will and to do of his good pleasure." Keeping this in mind we can have no regrets for past seeming failures. God never fails.

If we were on a journey and rejoicing in the glorious view of hills and landscape before us, we would not count the steps taken in proceeding to our destination, for, as Mrs. Eddy writes (Science and Health, p. 426), "When the destination is desirable, expectation speeds our progress." Even if a cloud should loom up and obscure the view, we could proceed with perfect assurance, certain of reaching our destination. Every step taken, even as every angel entertained, brings us, humanly speaking, nearer heaven. We can always rejoice in the fact that, as John tells us, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him: for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure."

"Time no longer"

FLORENCE M. HOLLICK

THESE lines written by one of our American poets,

> God will help thee for to-morrow;
> Every day begin again, had always appealed to the writer, but it was not until after instruction in Christian Science that it was scientifically understood how each day may be begun anew. On page 584 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy defines day and says, in part: "The objects of time and sense disappear in the illumination of spiritual understanding, and Mind measures time according to the good that is unfolded. This unfolding is God's day."

Some years ago, a lesson that has many times since proved helpful was learned. A wrong condition had persistently presented itself all day. The truth had been earnestly declared and false beliefs denied, until it seemed that all the student knew how to do had been done. When the time for retiring came, the condition was still, to mortal sense, in evidence; so an earnest effort was made to turn away from the belief that there had been a past day with its beliefs of discord. The words, "Creation is ever appearing, and must ever continue to appear from the nature of its inexhaustible source" (Science and Health, p. 507) were considered, and it was seen that time had nothing to do with this true creation. It is unfolding eternally in its perfection, ever fresh from Principle. Now all that is real is perfect, harmonious, and immortal. In reality, there was never even a "five minutes ago" with its belief of imperfection. Then to meet the suggestion that the seeming difficulty might be present in the morning, the student went on to dwell on the scientific understanding of morning until it was seen that morning could only bring more light, a fuller realization of perfection, because of progress. With the understanding of these eternal verities, the wrong condition passed into its native nothingness.

John tells us that in his vision the angel lifted up his hand to heaven and sware "there should be time no longer." Christian Science teaches us that the kingdom of heaven, harmony, is here now, therefore no belief of time enters into any demonstration. All we shall ever need is already provided by the Father. Man dwells now in the realm of the undimensional, where no belief of duration exists to counterfeit eternity. Good is ever present and the only presence. False theology would move perfection into some shadowy future. Christian Science teaches that to-day is the day of salvation. Now is the opportunity to work out salvation from the belief that man needs to be saved. There is no postponement in the law of God.

In the parable, the tares and wheat grew side by side until the harvest, when the tares were to be gathered first and burned and then the wheat was to be garnered. On one occasion our Master said, "Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest." Since to so-called human consciousness the ideas of good and the beliefs of evil seem to exist side by side, the harvesting process needs to be a continuous one; namely, the activity by which the evil is seen to be the lie and is consumed in the white heat of Truth. Thus every so-called moment comes to be recognized as only an opportunity to express Mind. As this orderly unfoldment of the evermore of good proceeds, all sense of hurry is eliminated, nothing happens too soon or too late, and any argument of mortal mind that would arise to interfere with this calm reflection of Mind is seen as illusion and therefore as powerless to divert or pervert God's plan of harmony for His creation. This, therefore, is the Lord's day, in which to rejoice and be glad, the day which never ends in night, but grows brighter and brighter until perfection is attained and consciousness is proved to be flooded with light ineffable; for sin, disease, and death shall have passed away into nothingness.

Steadfastness of Purpose

HAZEL L. ZIMMERMAN

ON page 261 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mary Baker Eddy has given to the earnest student of Christian Science counsel that will, if adhered to, revolutionize his thinking, and eventually his very existence. She says, "Hold thought steadfastly to the enduring, the good, and the true, and you will bring these into your experience proportionably to their occupancy of your thoughts." Every one has some purpose, some form of work that he wishes to bring to perfection, but his difficulty lies in his ignorance of how this is to be accomplished without encountering the waylaying effects of anxiety, doubt, and fear. In showing humanity how to meet this need, Christian Science is bringing to the world to-day the greatest help and encouragement, for through its teachings we learn how to close the door on failure and defeat and open it wide to successful achievement. Perhaps there is no phase of the human mind so constantly trying to make of itself a reality, no argument so tenacious and no disguise so subtle, as the effort of evil to sway us from our steadfastness of purpose, our desire to reflect Principle in our thinking and thereby bring into our experience the good results which must follow our obedience to Principle.

Constant mental alertness is awake to every lying argument of error that attempts to present itself and insures the immediate recognition of the fact that the truth existed before any attempt to prevent it could even claim to exist. Does it not necessitate a steadfast determination to know only one power—the power of divine Mind, the allness of a God who is Love? Accepting as our mental concept only the enduring, the good, and the true, we must ever behold God perfectly expressed as the only neighbor. How long could a mortal belief, calling itself a sick man, exist, if one were holding fast mentally only to that which is good? Could it be possible for the present seeming condition of money worship and unrest to continue if men were seeking the enduring? Would world war, strife, hatred, vain bickerings, and deceits need to be experienced if every one of us accepted only that which is true, only that which is revealed to us as Truth through founding our thinking on Principle?

We must bear in mind that, as Mrs. Eddy says, "Divine Mind rightly demands man's entire obedience, affection, and strength. No reservation is made for any lesser loyalty" (Science and Health, p. 183). In the measure, then, that we are obedient—and steadfastness of purpose can only mean obedience, through an impulsion of Principle to greater growth—are we blessed. The experience of the active Christian Scientist of to-day may well be summed up in Paul's words, "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye stedfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord."

Self-Government

LUCY HILLIER

WHILE we were conversing recently, a young student of Oxford University, who is not a Christian Scientist, remarked to the writer, "How is it that we are taught science, literature, art, and every other subject but government, the most important of all subjects?" Involuntarily my thoughts turned with gratitude to that great exponent of true government, Mary Baker Eddy; for, in one brief sentence in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 106), she reveals the origin and ultimate of sound government, in the words, "Man is properly self-governed only when he is guided rightly and governed by his Maker, divine Truth and Love." However slow the process may appear on the surface, it is through self-government alone that harmony will prevail in the individual, in the family, and eventually in nations.

Looking back through history, one sees amongst the great spiritual teachers that not many of them have shown the ability to establish their teachings in such a way that their followers could carry on their work. Mrs. Eddy displayed true genius in this direction. In her inspired work, the Manual of the Mother Church, is delineated a form of government that will stand the test of ages. Her spiritual insight and breadth of vision in this matter cannot be overestimated. For those who have "eyes to see," it is interesting to discover the delicate skill with which she steered the Christian Science movement past the rocks of a possible ecclesiastical despotism and the rocks of an oligarchy.

In these days, more than ever, Christian Scientists have the great opportunity of proving by their works that they appreciate the life and teachings of their great Leader, by learning to abstain from loose thinking and its inevitable correlatives, loose talking and uninspired action. In this way they will prove the truth of Mrs. Eddy's words on page 210 of Miscellany: "The right thinker abides under the shadow of the Almighty. His thoughts can only reflect peace, good will towards men, health, and holiness."

Divine Principle inspired and will sustain the form of government instituted by Mrs. Eddy. Principle thunders and will continue to thunder its great "I AM THAT I AM," to all that is unlike itself, until each disciple of Truth, through spiritual understanding and experience is able to realize the truth of Mrs. Eddy's words on page 468 of Science and Health, "All is infinite Mind and its infinite manifestation, for God is All-in-all."

Selected Articles

["In the Field"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., June 9, 1920]

The description given by the Master in the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew of the circumstances that would attend the second coming of the Christ, gives plenty of opportunity for study. Two sentences of this prophecy have given many persons needless torment. In these two statements Christ Jesus says: "Then shall two be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left. Two women shall be grinding at the mill; the one shall be taken, and the other left." In the second sentence the words "women shall be" are indicated by the translators of the King James version of the Bible not to be in the original.

These passages have caused difficulty because readers not understanding their significance have thought in terms of the physical and not from the standpoint of the mental. To them the two in the field have meant nothing more nor less than "flesh and bones," material people, one of whom was to be saved in the general upheaval accompanying the reappearing of the Christ, and the other to be forced to experience the process of damnation in all its details as pictured by Dante or false theology as a whole. But this sort of explanation of Jesus' statements presupposes that matter is real, and that there is therefore something actually to be punished, whereas Christian Science shows that Mind and its idea is all there is, and that any belief that there is more than all there is possesses no actuality. Hence the dream of a material universe peopled by physical beings is forever eliminated by the allness of divine consciousness. Of course, in this so-called world, any belief in sin receives its punishment until destroyed.

In these two sentences quoted from Matthew, then, is seen once more the metaphor of the Bible—the use of figurative language which is almost ever present in that Book as a means of imparting metaphysical facts to those around them. In what is called the world there seem to be to-day two activities, the one good, which is inseparable from divine reality, the other called evil, the tendency of which is always downward. These activities are primarily mental, of course, for action of any kind is the result of thought. Concerning these two seeming entities, Mrs. Eddy writes in "Unity of Good" (p. 21): "In Romans (ii. 15) we read the apostle's description of mental processes wherein human thoughts are 'the mean while accusing or else excusing one another.' If we observe our mental processes, we shall find that we are perpetually arguing with ourselves; yet each mortal is not two personalities, but one. In like manner good and evil talk to one another; yet they are not two but one, for evil is naught, and good only is reality." Thus Mrs. Eddy states that there is but one activity, the effect of divine Mind, forever true and the one presence. Evil's so-called activity is purely a supposition, the supposed product of mortal mind. That which claims to argue against a man's turning to Principle is, consequently, the carnal pseudo-mentality whose talk is ever "of the earth, earthy."

In every hour in every man's experience there are these two "in the field," two "at the mill." He is constantly choosing which is to be "taken" and destroyed, and which "left," or accepted and held to. He is continuously knowing and adhering to the activity of Principle as the only real, or is cleaving to false material beliefs engendered by the illusionary mortal mind. And what is going on in individual experience is taking place as a world happening, and as an incident to every subdivision and segment of the world, in greater or less degree, whether in governmental, economic, religious, or other circles. Good and evil are being taken or left according as the individual or nation is holding in some measure to Principle or repudiating Truth. In the days of Noah the evil was so consistently left or accepted that the deluge of materiality swept over the earth. In this age, however, the manifestation of intelligence is clearer to mortals and they are able to rise more and more into the translucent atmosphere of spiritual understanding, by which falsity is shown to be a myth and the good the present reality. And it is because Mind and the idea of Mind are the only verities that men will be able finally to overthrow any belief of any other presence.

Evil would claim to resist being "taken," but the allness of good makes its present lessening and its final obliteration sure, no matter how severe the process of elimination of wrong beliefs may seem to be. This is because Principle is being depended upon and must alone be depended upon to save the world. As Mrs. Eddy says in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 492): "These two contradictory theories—that matter is something, or that all is Mind—will dispute the ground, until one is acknowledged to be the victor. Discussing his campaign, General Grant said: 'I propose to fight it out on this line, if it takes all summer.' Science says: All is Mind and Mind's idea. You must fight it out on this line. Matter can afford you no aid."

The struggle between these two antagonistic ways of thinking and the evidences of its results are apparent everywhere for even the most superficial observer to see. Everywhere old things are passing away. Reforms sought after for centuries upon centuries are accomplished with suddenness. Every individual must undergo this leavening process, and the sooner he embarks upon this holy work the better for himself and for all mankind. It is his duty, indeed, to set about this task at once. The truth that divine consciousness and its reflections are all the "new heaven" and "the new earth" that exist is urging itself upon the comprehension of men. They must accept it, and are enabled to do so through the revelation of Christian Science.

[C. W. Hale in New Castle (Ind.) Times]

The inference that Christian Science treatment is accomplished by suggestion, or the operation of human will power, is wholly wrong and absolutely contrary to what Christian Science teaches and practices. Any one who has studied Christian Science understands that the practice of healing is based unreservedly upon the power of God as revealed and demonstrated by Christ Jesus. By this teaching it has been proved that it is God, divine Mind, which heals the sick, and countless thousands of intelligent Christian people bear grateful testimony to this fact. Human will is not a healing agency. It is not of God, and has no actual power; for it is of the "carnal mind" and the "carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be."

Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, makes this perfectly plain in her statement on pages 19 and 20 of her 1901 Message to The Mother Church: "From ordinary mental practice to Christian Science is a long ascent, but to go from the use of inanimate drugs to any susceptible misuse of the human mind, such as mesmerism, hypnotism, and the like, is to subject mankind unwarned and undefended to the unbridled individual human will. . . . The whole world needs to know that the milder forms of animal magnetism and hypnotism are yielding to its aggressive features. . . . People may listen complacently to the suggestion of the inaudible falsehood, not knowing what is hurting them or that they are hurt. This mental bane could not bewilder, darken, or misguide consciousness, physically, morally, or spiritually, if the individual knew what was at work and his power over it. This unseen evil is the sin of sins; it is never forgiven. Even the agony and death that it must sooner or later cause the perpetrator, cannot blot out its effects on himself till he suffers up to its extinction and stops practicing it."

The intimation that Christian Science is not based upon and does not accept the authority of the Bible reveals unmistakably that this critic knows little or nothing about Christian Science. The truth of the matter is that Christian Scientists use and depend upon the Bible continuously. They probably are closer students of it than any other one class of people. The daily lessons read by all active Christian Scientists contain a large number of citations taken from all parts of the Scriptures, from Genesis to Revelation, and these Lesson-Sermons are read in the church services on Sunday and are taught and studied in the Sunday schools. In fact, no Christian Scientist can successfully or satisfactorily read the literature of Christian Science without the use of the Bible. Mrs. Eddy based all her work, her writings, and her teachings upon the Scriptures.

Christian Science is based upon a spiritual interpretation of the Bible, which is wholly consistent, giving to mankind an understanding of the Scriptures which enables the student to demonstrate the law of God as given therein with scientific accuracy, in the healing of sickness and the overcoming of sin and all manner of discord. This is fully confirmed by all Mrs. Eddy's writings, and is especially evidenced by the following statement made by her in "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany" on page 238: "Rightly to read and to practise the Scriptures, their spiritual sense must be discerned, understood, and demonstrated. God being Spirit, His language and meaning are wholly spiritual. Uninspired knowledge of the translations of the Scriptures has imparted little power to practise the Word. Hence the revelation, discovery, and presentation of Christian Science—the Christ Science, or 'new tongue' of which St. Mark prophesied—became requisite in the divine order. On the swift pinions of spiritual thought man rises above the letter, law, or morale of the inspired Word to the spirit of Truth, whereby the Science is reached that demonstrates God. When the Bible is thus read and practised, there is no possibility of misinterpretation."

In answer to the assertion that "Christian Science denies the deity of Jesus" let me say that Christian Science does exactly what Christ Jesus commanded mankind to do; it accepts unreservedly his teachings, and if it can be shown anywhere that he taught and expected people to believe in him as "deity," then one would be justified in making such a statement and criticism. On the other hand if it can be shown that Christ Jesus stated repeatedly that he was not God, and in no case claimed that he was anything other than the "Son of God" and the "son of man" coming to "do the will of the Father" and claiming that he "could do nothing of himself" but did what he saw "the Father do," then it is right for Christian Science to teach as it does that Christ Jesus is the "way, the truth, and the life" showing mankind the way to prove man's real relation to God, to prove the power of God over all phases of sin, disease, and every other type of discord.

A careful reading of the gospel according to John will reveal to the honest seeker for Truth that Christ Jesus did not claim to be God, but continually taught his sonship to

Digitized by Google

God. Here it is brought out that he was not teaching any doctrine of his own but that of God; he came not of himself, "but," he said, "he that sent me is true, whom ye know not;" he could do nothing of himself, but asserted, "As my Father hath taught me, I speak these things;" and so he stated positively in many other places what relation he bore to God, and after his resurrection he sent this message to the disciples: "Go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God."

Christian Scientists accept the word and the teaching of Christ Jesus, and do not add to it or take from it. The fact that he said to the young ruler, "Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is, God," is sufficient for them, and they accept his word as truth.

Let it be further and fully understood that Christian Science does not deny the atonement of Christ Jesus. The truth is that it accepts it without reservation and proves its efficacy by those "signs" which Christ Jesus said would "follow them that believe." Christ Jesus came to teach and demonstrate man's unity or at-one-ment with God, and to show us the way that we, too, might prove our real relationship with God, and overcome all phases of evil. Mrs. Eddy has written in the tenets of Christian Science, in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," on page 497: "We acknowledge Jesus' atonement as the evidence of divine, efficacious Love, unfolding man's unity with God through Christ Jesus the Way-shower; and we acknowledge that man is saved through Christ, through Truth, Life, and Love as demonstrated by the Galilean Prophet in healing the sick and overcoming sin and death."

[T. A. Latta in Tulsa (Okla.) World]

I have heard the doctrine sent forth from the pulpit of the church that the days of divine miracles passed with the Christ himself, and in the same breath the assurance given that the redemptive power of the evangelical theory still remained, but could be realized only after death! This denying one half the promise and admonitions of the Savior and preaching the other half was not intended to be a compromise with modern thought and the thing we call devil, but it was, in my judgment, just that and nothing else in fact. I would like to see the Biblical authority for such a conclusion. I would like any modern pulpiteer to point me to a single place in the life of Jesus Christ where he withdrew his promise or relieved those who profess discipleship from the clear and unmistakable obligation. Both may be there. I make no pretense of being a Bible student. But if so, I should like to see and read.

It should mean much to the church that a cult has grown up of recent years that rests its case almost altogether on not alone its teachings that the power of God is sufficient to heal bodily ills now, but on its ability to demonstrate the truth of that teaching. This cult has gained hundreds of thousands of adherents not alone from among the ignorant and credulous, as some suspect, not from among those sound in body and spirit, but from among the educated and refined who in almost every instance were suffering from bodily or spiritual distempers; who were wretched and in thousands of cases given up for incurables by men of science as well as the representatives of the church. They found a power that did restore health, that did compose their mental disturbances, and lashed doubt and despair from the temple of God's designing. Grant that the trouble was mental; what then?

It is not meeting the opportunity of the church or discharging the obligation of the church for the denominationalist to feel called upon to preach a diatribe against this cult every so often. It is not meeting the issue for the representative of the church to sneer that these so-called cures are merely the results of emotionalism, that the thousands who have regained hope and health and found happiness as a result of their acceptance of the new cult's teachings, are merely laboring under a hallucination. That attitude simply denies, and by those ordained to uphold, the autocracy and omnipotence of God.

It further impugns the intelligence of thousands of men and women, equal in all respects to those who sit in judgment on both their credulity and their sincerity. If Dr. ———— wants to know where part of his church membership is going I suspect he might with profit to himself study the rolls of this cult referred to.

At this point I hear the average reader exclaim, "Ah! he's a Christian Scientist." But let me assure you that I am a product of Presbyterian lineage that reaches back in direct line almost to the Covenanters themselves; but that has become so dulled by evolution or rebirth that it leaves me without the slightest taint of denominational pride. On form and in church membership I am orthodox. I am not a Christian Scientist. But I would account myself fortunate indeed could I get from that cult those benefits and that perfect assurance which I have seen experienced by so many.

I could not find it in my heart to say an unkind word against any denomination that is seeking to ease the minds of men with respect to that transformation which death ushers in. When I see any mortal sincerely attempting to emulate the Master, or whose eye of faith has kindled and whose heart has been made light and glad, I say, Blessed indeed art thou! It matters not the slightest to me from whence the inspiration came; for I believe that in religion as well as in other things it is the demonstration that counts. It was no mere man that rendered the supreme judgment, "By their fruits ye shall know them." And the church has lost tremendously in membership in the past few years! My complaint is that denominationalism has almost come to obscure the figure of Jesus on the cross; my indictment is that the church has got too far away from the promises and certainties of God and too close to society, to finance, to industry, and to the world.

Healing

MARY A. MACOMBER

LONG had seemed the seeking
For peace and perfect health;
The care and pain still lingered,
Midst others' joy and wealth.

One morning came a message:
Help us! The need is great!
Quickly, I rose rejoicing
To another good to take.

Joy, as on wings, went with me,
And deeper, fuller grew.
No thought of self intruded;
God's love alone I knew.

Love was proved availing;
The need was fully met.
I also learned, in loving,
False selfhood to forget.

The golden sheaves were garnered
To the new-old glad refrain:
What seek ye? He is risen.
My joy to serve again.

Policy

SEVERAL centuries ago Cervantes declared, in a famous sentence which has since become a proverb, that honesty is the best policy. As a matter of fact Cervantes was really insisting, without knowing it, that all policy was bad. For if honesty, which is necessarily truth, were the best policy, then any phase of dishonesty, not being truth, must be outside the whole range of policy, which, like evil, would comprise various degrees of iniquity. This is only another way of saying that a thing either is in Principle or out of Principle, and is consequently good or bad. There are no degrees of good, for good is absolute, and in the same way there are no degrees of honesty, for honesty is absolute. Argal, as the clown says in Hamlet, honesty is not policy at all, it is a divine attribute, and the variations of policy, which constitute so many degrees of departure from Principle, are never honest, and are therefore very much what Hamlet himself atrabiliously described a politician as being, namely, one who would circumvent God, Principle.

Now it is impossible to tell a lie about nothing, just as it would be impossible for evil to as much as seem to be if there were no such thing as good. Evil is the absence of good, just as a lie is the absence of truth. Policy, therefore, could not exist, even supposititiously, unless it were a lie about something actually existing. It is defined in the dictionaries as political sagacity, statecraft, or craftiness, and here you have its various deviations from Principle. But political sagacity, statecraft, and craftiness are all of them efforts to display human wisdom; consequently policy is the lie about, or counterfeit of, divine wisdom,—in other words, it is foolishness. That must be perfectly obvious to anybody who will consent to be logical, and not to fool himself by casuistical hairsplitting. Any person who, however slightly, departs from honesty, may succeed, for the moment, in deceiving somebody else, and gaining a personal or a public end. In doing this he may congratulate himself upon his political sagacity, his statecraft, or his craftiness. But what has he actually achieved? In the terrible sentence of Christ Jesus, he may have gained the whole world, but he will have lost his own soul; and what will it advantage him in the great struggle, throughout eternity, to have gained a petty advantage, for a few years, at the cost of widening the distance between himself and Principle, which has been increasing ever since he consented to depart at a tangent from Truth. "The divine method of paying sin's wages," Mrs. Eddy writes, on page 240 of Science and Health, "involves unwinding one's snarls, and learning from experience how to divide between sense and Soul."

It is just this dividing between sense and Soul, between material inclination and spiritual understanding, which is involved in the surrender to policy. "Human policy," Mrs. Eddy writes in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 212), "is a fool that saith in his heart, 'No God'—a caressing Judas that betrays you, and commits suicide. This godless policy never knows what happiness is, and how it is obtained." Now, remembering that in Principle it is impossible to diverge from Principle, that in honesty there can be no shade of dishonesty, it becomes perfectly apparent that there is no such thing as divine policy, because policy constitutes a choice between expedients, and in Principle there are no expedients, there is only absolute Truth. This makes it clear why human policy is, as Mrs. Eddy says, a fool. It declares there is no God, no Principle, and in saying that it becomes the Judas which betrays at the very moment when it is professing to give the individual the kiss of peace, ease in the senses. In doing that it commits suicide, for it expresses its own apartness from Principle, and so its own nothingness, since everything that professes to exist outside Principle has no existence whatever, but is a mere negation of Truth.

It is perfectly true that the world recognizes what it regards as a legitimate form of policy, using policy in its most general sense. But this legitimate idea of policy, if the phrase may be permitted, is lost the moment that policy passes from theory into practice. It is the theory of policy, so considered, that the political party or the politician is acting according to its or his highest idea of truth; but this is frankly repudiated in the very term which decides that it is good party policy to adopt the course which is most likely to be of advantage to the party or the politician, without reference to its exact relation to Principle. The politician will frankly tell you that to do the thing which is in accordance with Principle will, as a rule, be political suicide. But it is moral suicide which causes the individual or the party to diverge from Principle, in what it considers its best interests, since though such a policy may be effective at the moment, it is bound to warp the human consciousness with the belief that there is efficacy in dishonesty, and so to throw the party or the individual at once off at a tangent from Principle, and leave it or him to regain an alignment with Principle under increasing difficulties.

When people talk, therefore, of the policy of a party or of a paper, they either mean that Principle cannot be accepted, and that friends must be made of the mammon of unrighteousness, or else they attempt to use the word policy as a synonym for divine wisdom, which is an abuse of terms. The only policy, in the latter sense, which is legitimately possible to a party or to a paper, is a strict adherence to Principle, an effort undeviatingly to reflect divine wisdom. Such an effort is, however, not an effort of policy; it is a spiritual effort to bring human endeavor into an at-one-ment with Principle, and ultimates, as all such endeavors must, in a way which would positively astound the ordinary theologian,—that is, in the effort to demonstrate the atonement. The truth about policy, then, is that the only policy for a party or a paper is a striving for the atonement, an effort to bring the so-called policy of the party or of the paper into an at-one-ment with divine Principle. But the moment that that attempt is made, the whole ordinary idea of policy is repudiated, and the party or the paper finds itself not attempting to be guided by human wisdom, but to reflect divine wisdom.

Policy, of course, in the sense of a program of state government is to-day a necessity of human existence, just as is the politician in the sense of the person who attempts to carry out, to change, or to prevent such a program. This in itself is a proof of the extraordinary difficulty of attempting to express scientific conclusions in material language, and of the vital necessity for insistence on a scientific vocabulary. Policy, in short, is one of the words grown on the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. The politician, as it were, enters the political arena with a winnowing fan in his hand. How far he is going to serve God or mammon will depend solely upon the degree of his understanding of Principle. It was of the man so identified with Principle as to be known to the world as Jesus the Christ, that the Baptist said, "I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance: but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear: he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire: whose fan is in his hand, and he will throughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire."

FREDERICK DIXON.

All Good Is Immortal

To know divine Principle and its expression is real and permanent happiness. The real man, living entirely as idea or activity expressing infinite Mind, ever rejoices in this understanding. What constitutes the goodness of his living, whether it be called satisfaction or enthusiasm or by any other name, comes eternally from the one source. His immortal joy consists in his inseparability from the one creative and all-sufficing Spirit, which is God. There is no other genuine relationship or association than that of the real man to God. Forever the true man has been and is associating wholly with divine intelligence, not with persons. The understanding of this is necessarily enthusiastic, though calm and sure. All there is to good is thus omnipresent, for the one intelligent Principle is always here, manifesting itself with inexhaustible vigor. This is the truth of immortality.

On page 42 of "Miscellaneous Writings," at the end of a clear answer to an important question, Mrs. Eddy says: "The difference between a belief of material existence and the spiritual fact of Life is, that the former is a dream and unreal, while the latter is real and eternal. Only as we understand God, and learn that good, not evil, lives and is immortal, that immortality exists only in spiritual perfection, shall we drop our false sense of Life in sin or sense material, and recognize a better state of existence." Thus it is for each one to know and to prove his immortality here and now as the expression of the one infinitely spiritual Life, and to rejoice that this Life is always manifest as Immanuel, or "God with us." The demonstration of this involves, of course, the demonstration of the immortality of all that ever has been real. When one reasons carefully as to what one has had of good, what one has truly loved, one sees that divine intelligence manifest is all that ever has been present to inspire and satisfy in every way. By turning thus wholly to the truth one finds in the loving divine Mind the present tangible reality of all that ever has existed. Unlimited existence as idea expressing infinite Principle is alone spiritually and tangibly adequate.

This actual understanding of immortality is obviously altogether different from any suppositions of materialism. In Article VIII, Section 3, of the Manual of The Mother Church, Mrs. Eddy admonishes us: "When it is necessary to show the great gulf between Christian Science and theosophy, hypnotism, or spiritualism, do it, but without hard words." The difference is that Christian Science reveals one infinite Soul or divine consciousness, of which the immortal man is the expression. In other words, there are not many souls, and the one real Soul, God, always has existed quite apart from the belief in matter. The healing comfort of Christian Science lies in the inseparability of the true man from all that ever has been real, which is simply divine intelligence manifest, and not human persons at all. The immortality that satisfies is the immortality of Mind and idea. Any sense of mortality or human personality is but counterfeit of the reality. Certainly, therefore, no one should even wish to perpetuate a counterfeit. What is desirable is to turn entirely away from the spurious, with all its makeshifts, to the true idea of the true Mind.

When one feels that one has lost something, one needs first of all to consider what it was that one cherished. The fact is, that the lovable quality of the divine Mind is all there ever has been truly to appreciate. The inspiration of divine Love, however, continues now and forever, including all the lovable quality or activity there ever has been. Immanuel, or "God with us," never has been material but eternally remains spiritually manifest. The one Spirit, which is God, is not some supposedly etherealized sort of matter, but is simply infinite divine consciousness infinitely active. In proportion as one sees and rejoices in the spiritual meaning of whatever one may have cherished, one is blessed with the boundless comfort of Christian Science. The sense of mortality, which is but another name for the belief in physicality, is what vanishes and must be replaced with the idea of Principle.

The inspiration of Spirit is constantly glad experience. As Mrs. Eddy says on page 8 of her Message for 1902: "The spiritually minded are inspired with tenderness, Truth, and Love. The life of Christ Jesus, his words and his deeds, demonstrate Love. We have no evidence of being Christian Scientists except we possess this inspiration, and its power to heal and to save. The energy that saves sinners and heals the sick is divine: and Love is the Principle thereof. Scientific Christianity works out the rule of spiritual love; it makes man active, it prompts perpetual goodness, for the ego, or I, goes to the Father, whereby man is Godlike." Infinite Spirit, manifest as the Christ, is omnipresent in spite of any suppositions of materiality. As one turns to Spirit and understands Spirit, one proves, of course, the presence of all that has ever been real of the Christ. This is the "Lo, I am with you alway," as revealed in the light of Christian Science. Understood and demonstrated, this omnipresent Principle with its idea not only comforts but heals and satisfies in every way. Thus it is for each one to be actively content in comprehending with infinite unfoldment the genuine spiritual fact that the inspiration of good eternally continues in the here and now of the divine consciousness. True Spirit can never be materialized; but instead all belief in matter must give way to the divine Mind and its idea as the only actuality of existence. That this is the truth Mrs. Eddy has shown unmistakably throughout her writings. Each student of Christian Science, therefore, has an endless opportunity to study and to practice all that she has written on the whole subject of Spirit and its manifestation.

Among the Churches

Current Notes

FAR ROCKAWAY, N. Y.—At 7:30 o'clock this morning [July 24], the corner stone of First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Far Rockaway, was laid with simple ceremonies in the presence of members of the congregation and friends of the church. The new church is being built on Mott Avenue, adjoining Masonic Temple. The auditorium will have a seating capacity of five hundred. It is expected to have the building ready for services in the fall.—Brooklyn Times.

The Lectures

Geneva, Switzerland (Society).—Lecturer introduced by John Pisteur, who said in part:—

Throughout the centuries the same and almost pitiful question has occurred which was asked by Pontius Pilate in the presence of Jesus: "What is truth?" And when the procurator of Judea asked it, this question was already as old as humanity itself. For at all times and in every clime the human mind has been obsessed by life's enigma and has tried to tear the veil of mystery thrown over the invisible realities by the fugitive appearance of things; and so, whether out of skepticism or the depth of despair, humanity has questioned the infinite with these same words of Pilate: "What is truth?" Many hypotheses have already disappointed men, or given them but little satisfaction. Is truth so remote that only a few privileged ones can perceive and attain it? Nearly twenty centuries ago, Jesus, the gentle Nazarene, came to prove the contrary by revealing it to the humble and proclaiming it to all who wanted to hear it, affirming the constant possibility to realize it with these words: "The kingdom of God is within you." Yes, almost twenty centuries ago he demonstrated most wonderfully the efficacy of his preaching by absolute fidelity to these absolute words: "Hear, O Israel: The Lord our God is one Lord," a paraphrase of the great commandment: "I am the Lord thy God. . . . Thou shalt have no other gods before me." And so he made the truth to shine in all its splendor, this truth which in modern language one might call the monism of Spirit; that is, one Life, one power, good, encircling the whole universe.

Alas! and to their own misery, mankind have made themselves other gods, suggested to their imagination by material beliefs. That is why even in Christian history, Jesus' Christianity no longer found its integral expression, and for most Christians the tyranny of the flesh with its suffering and decay has hidden the blessings of Spirit.

It was to be a woman who in the Scriptures, in the life and example of Christ Jesus, and on the basis of the first commandment and the first chapter of Genesis, where all creation is declared to be very good and the work of Spirit, was to discover the secret and prove the words of Jesus, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Fifty-four years ago Mrs. Eddy saw the work that was to be done and ten years later gave to the world the most precious book of modern times, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." Through this revelation integral Christianity has again been made possible, and there is abundant proof that no promise of the gospel is outgrown and that to-day as of yore Jesus' good news to John the Baptist is still true: "The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up."

Christian Scientists who to-day are again lisping, with a new understanding, the great truths of the gospel and who endeavor in every way and in every circumstance to fight the good fight of faith, know from experience that they have found the answer to the troubling question, "What is truth?"

Hoquiam, Wash. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Mrs. Rosa W. Sawyer, who said in part:—

Christian Science is a religion, and a very practical religion, as many of us who study and apply its teachings to our daily problems gladly testify. We find that whatever our business or work may be, we have a practical way of proving that God is "a very present help in trouble." Before we knew of Christian Science, we may have been somewhat as was a woman, a dear friend of mine, who after she had learned of Christian Science, once said to me, "Just to think that at the very time when I was struggling so hard to support my fatherless children, trying to live a worthy Christian life, and praying unto God who seemed far off and unknowable—even then Christian Science was known and being used by hundreds, aye, thousands, but I had no knowledge of it." And her tone implied regret for this ignorance. These lectures given by Christian Science churches are for the purpose of helping to overcome such ignorance of Christian Science and its mission.

Daily Washingtonian.

Gallup, N. M. (Society).—Lecturer introduced by Mrs. Anna Tillman Boyd, who said in part:—

In a recent number of The Literary Digest I find the following quotation taken from The Kobe Herald, a newspaper published in one of the larger cities of Japan: "It is the subserviency of Christianity to materialism that has crippled the church and rendered it unable to stay the forces of war and plunder." This, you may say, is the indictment of an oriental press, but in our hearts we know that all Christendom is weary of the husks of materialism, and is crying out for greater spirituality—for the living waters of love.

Christian Science has come to us as the religion of love, and love is the fulfilling of the law. God's law is the positive power of spirituality counteracting and destroying the negative power of materialism. Some one has well said that the credo, or I believe, of the past must give place to the amo, or I love, of the future. Actions are determined not so much by what one believes as by what one loves; for "where your treasure is, there will your heart be also."

Baton Rouge, La. (Society).—Lecturer introduced by J. Y. Sanders, Jr., who said in part:—

Centuries ago Christ Jesus, the Way-shower for humanity, and the founder of Christianity, brought to a sin weary world his divinely inspired message of the wondrous love of God for man. He healed every kind of sickness and sin known to that age, and when questioned as to his mission pointed to his works as proof of his divine authority.

In this age many have come to realize that these works which Jesus did and demanded of his followers, were not for an age but for all time; that the miracles, so called, performed by the Master's disciples and by the early Christians were not the effect of some mysterious and supernatural gift to a limited number, but were and are the effect of the operation of spiritual law,—of the law of God. That this wonderful truth has been revealed to this age is due to the unfaltering courage and unselfish devotion of a gentle and loving woman, Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science.

Vineland, N. J. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Harold C. Kain, who said in part:—

Jesus said, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." What the world needs to-day is rest and peace. Nothing new is happening—it is the same old trouble, human unrest, and it is this trouble that Jesus taught how to destroy, but his followers gradually lost the practical use of his teaching. Some fifty years ago Mary Baker Eddy discovered the Science of Christianity which Jesus taught, naming her discovery Christian Science and demonstrating anew the power of God that heals sickness, discord, and unrest now as aforetime.

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE, ENGLAND (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Reginald C. Smith, who said in part:—

The name Christian was invented by the wit of the people of Antioch as a nickname, and although bestowed on the disciples of Jesus as a stigma, it was accepted by them as a distinction. One definition of Science is "truth ascertained," and thus it might correctly be said that Christian Science is the ascertained truth about Christianity. As taught to-day it is a healing system, curing not only bodily ills but also mental errors,—pride, selfishness, and so on; in fact, the whole gamut of the ungodlike qualities. It teaches how one should pray, and it logically defines God. All Christian Scientists have been healed of something through the application of this teaching; they have found the metaphysical healing of Christian Science to be "the most effective curative agent in medical practice," as Mrs. Eddy says on page 112 of Science and Health, and naturally they are very willing to pass on the good news to any others who wish to hear it.

NORWICH, ENGLAND (Society).—Lecturer introduced by Mrs. Harriet Jessie Jewson, who said in part:—

My own experience of Christian Science is that when it is faithfully and honestly applied, it heals the sick and sinning, and makes men and women happier. Before taking up its study, a large proportion of my time and energy was spent in trying to keep myself and family well, and with very little success, for we were constantly ill, and I was often in bed for weeks, and sometimes months at a time. My first physical healing came through the understanding of a child who had been taught in a Christian Science Sunday school. I asked him for help, and was instantaneously healed of a severe bilious attack, and the healing has been permanent, for I have never had another. Gradually I learned through Christian Science to know more of God, to read my Bible with more understanding, to love it, and to turn to it for the solution of small and great problems, and as I did so I became happier and healthier.

SCHORNDORF, WURTTEMBERG, GERMANY (Society).—Lecturer introduced by Architect Schiedt, who said in part:—

We have come here to-day to listen to a lecture on "Christian Science: The Science of Redemption." At the present time when so much inharmony is besetting us, what does humanity need more than redemption, than the knowledge of how to get out of all the discordant experiences of this life? As at times of great need, so now more than ever before men are looking out for help beyond themselves and their time-honored systems, and it is at such times that the words of our great Master come nearer to the receptive hearts, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Following the life of this great Master, Jesus Christ, we find that to him there was no situation, no problem of human experience which he was not perfectly equal to meet and did not meet as its master. What enabled him to have such mastery was his absolute understanding of God, his understanding of the divine laws and their activity.

As these spiritual laws, like the great Lawgiver, are "the same yesterday and to day and for ever," and as their activity when understood must manifest itself at all times in the same way, Jesus once said: "And these signs shall follow them that believe; In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." To-day thousands of people testify gratefully that they have experienced this constructive, healing, and renewing force of the divine law in their own lives as a consequence of their understanding of God as revealed to them by Christian Science and as laid down in the textbook of Christian Science, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy.

MT. VERNON, N.Y. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Benjamin F. Meyers, who said in part:—

"I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly," said Jesus the Christ in explaining to those of his time his mission as the good shepherd. And he performed, as proof of his divine origin, what the world has called miracles,—healing the sick, freeing the sinners, raising the dead, and relieving every type of want and woe.

To his disciples he imparted the spiritual understanding that enabled them to repeat his works. "Preach the gospel," "Heal the sick," were his commands. For several hundred years healing accompanied the early Christians' preaching, but gradually this healing element was lost as creed and ritual displaced demonstration. After centuries of dogma, doubt, and darkness, the Comforter promised by Jesus has come, and healing is restored to Christianity through the discovery by Mary Baker Eddy of the same law of divine Mind that actuated the Master. This Science of living is operative to-day through Christian Science, Mrs. Eddy's gift to the world, offering a full salvation from sin, sickness, and death.

NEW LONDON, WIS. (Society).—Lecturer introduced by Mrs. Myrtle Swift, who said in part:—

As in Pilate's time, so down through the centuries from the heart of suffering humanity has gone forth the cry, "What is truth?" Jesus said, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." He knew the answer to Pilate's question, he knew and proved in his daily living that a knowledge of God, an understanding of the truth, would heal both the sick and the sinning and overcome even the last enemy.

Now as never before, perhaps, the world, torn by greed, strife, and suffering, is crying out for peace, is seeking for a Savior, for that knowledge of truth that will bring it surcease from sorrow, from mental and physical distress, and give it heaven here instead of in a far-off future.

Christian Science offers the world a remedy for its woes and that remedy is found only in the Bible teachings and is explained in the Christian Science textbook. Its only demand of the world is that it obey those great commandments, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength . . . and thy neighbour as thyself."

Testimonies of Healing

After reading the article in the Christian Science Sentinel of May 15th, entitled "A Word in Season," which should surely mean something to every Christian Scientist, I am prompted to send in my testimony in gratitude for what Christian Science has done for me and mine.

I have been healed of chronic bowel trouble from which I had suffered from childhood, also of hemorrhoids, from which I suffered for over a year, and was never free from pain day or night. In overcoming these diseases I had the help of a kind and loving practitioner at different times, but being young in Christian Science I depended on her help much as one would on a doctor, with the result that I was not relieved of suffering until I discovered that there was work for me to do—and earnest work at that. As Mrs. Eddy says in Science and Health (p. 10), "Seeking is not sufficient. It is striving that enables us to enter." So with me, just mere seeking in a vague way did not do the work, but it required long and earnest striving to gain an understanding of God as good, and to overcome the sense of fear, and when the fear was gone the disease went with it. My healings were slow, but I am the more grateful for that now as it made me work the harder, and the spiritual uplift gained from that study means more to me now by far than the physical healings.

We have had many, many healings in our family of three since coming into Christian Science about seven years ago. Our daughter, now fourteen years of age, has had many healings in Science; one in particular I wish to mention took place in 1914. It was an instantaneous healing of croup, which she seemed to have every time she took a cold. She has had but one attack since, which was soon overcome through the understanding of Truth. My husband was healed of the liquor and smoking habit through reading "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy.

Words are inadequate to tell of all the good that has come to us through the study and understanding of Christian Science. I am indeed grateful to God, the giver of all good, for all our blessings, and to Mrs. Eddy for giving to the world her discovery of this truth that Christ Jesus said would make us free, and for our periodicals. What would our home be without them? Why should we withdraw our subscriptions to them? In the words of the writer of the above-mentioned article, "Let us stand by the only true Principle of all healing, more firmly than ever before, and know that Truth in its own quiet, sure way, will do the work until all error is destroyed."

I can truly say that the statement my wife made in reference to my healing of the smoking and liquor habit is absolutely true; I was healed instantaneously of both these habits just through reading "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy. That was in the year 1914, and I have not had any desire for either of these since that time, for which I am very thankful.

Harden Hainline.

I am grateful for the help I am daily receiving through the study of Christian Science. The literature is a source of great encouragement as well as instruction and there is healing in every article. I have never taken medicine or been under the care of a physician in my life, Christian Science meeting my every need. Through it I have been healed of a severe stomach trouble for which I did not seem to get relief for a long time, but which troubled me less and less as I studied more and understood better the teachings of Christian Science. This trouble was fully and finally met more than three years ago and has never returned. I have had many minor physical healings and find that in proportion as I put into practice the truths learned through studying Christian Science, less physical inharmony comes up for correction.

While I am grateful for all of the physical help, I wish to say that the greatest comfort of all is the fact that one can replace wrong thinking with right thinking and thereby make the days happier and more truly useful. Such peace and happiness can only come from the one source of all good, and with it come true satisfaction and rest. I cannot express in words what a wonderful help this is in the daily problems which are constantly coming up, at home and in the office, to try to provoke and irritate one and make one unhappy. By this daily overcoming of little things through spiritual thinking, as learned through the study of the Lesson-Sermons and the literature, which is all so lovingly provided, every day can be made a happy, useful day. Can we be grateful enough to Mary Baker Eddy for making these teachings practical so that we all may avail ourselves of them?

For some time past I have felt it my duty to let others know what Christian Science has done for me and for our family. Through reading the literature I was cured of goitre, a slipping of the knee joint, that at times would cause me to be quite lame, of quick temper and continued resentment, and through the help of a loving practitioner I have been healed of other claims, such as sore throat and influenza.

Through the application of Christian Science our family was kept united when error tried to separate us, and where there was discontent and inharmony there is now peace and harmony. But I am thankful for all the trials that have come to us, for through them I have learned to depend upon God in all our problems. I am very grateful that my three children can begin while young to learn that God does help us when we truly rely upon Him. I am very grateful for the Sunday school, for all the activities of Christian Science, and for all the literature. Words fail me when I try to express my gratitude for the blessings that have come to me and mine.—(Mrs.) Sarah D. Hall, Chicago, Ill.

I wish to express my deepest gratitude for a knowledge of the teachings of Christian Science. For more than eight years I have been a sincere student of this teaching, and during this time have received countless blessings. I wish to relate how, through the practical application of the truth, wonderful results were attained. When first learning of this truth, my relatives and I were in constant need and worry, so that, regarded from a material standpoint, I was at the end of my strength, thoroughly discouraged, and longed for death. In my seeming desperation God led me to the Christian Science Wednesday evening meetings, which I attended regularly. I also read Der Herold with great zeal. A practitioner explained to me the fundamentals of this teaching and gave me treatment. After the services I always returned home comforted, and exerted myself to learn more of this truth, with God's help. In proportion to my growing understanding our household affairs improved. Financial worries, as well as fear and grief left us, inasmuch as I was beginning to realize the meaning of the words, "Casting all your care upon him; for he careth for you."

Digitized by Google

It would take too long to relate the countless blessings received. My gratitude is being expressed by constantly gaining more knowledge of the truth, in enriching my understanding through the realization of God's presence, constantly knowing that God guides me. Next to God I thank our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for the restoration of the practical teachings of Christ Jesus.

For the last three weeks I have not received the Sentinel and I missed it so much; then I realized what the Christian Science publications mean to me. They are daily, weekly, and monthly inspirations, and I would not like to be without them. In realizing what these publications mean to me, it was also unfolded that they are made up of contributions from the field, testimonies and articles from other Christian Scientists; then in gratitude for all I have received I feel it my duty to add my mite in hope that it will help others as I have been helped. Christian Science has been my only physician for more than three years. Through reading "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, I have been enabled to lay aside glasses, after having been told that I would always have to wear them. I have been healed of colds, sore throat, headaches, rheumatism, influenza, and a cough three physicians had failed to heal. One physician said there was a spot on one of my lungs and he gave me little hope of healing. I asked for help from a Christian Science practitioner and in three weeks was healed. My daughter has had many wonderful healings through the help of practitioners. For all of these blessings I am truly grateful, but when I think of the spiritual uplift, the healing of sin, then my heart goes out in gratitude to Mrs. Eddy for Science and Health. There are yet many wrong thoughts to heal (destroy) each day, but I know as I gain in understanding, these too will vanish.

Mrs. Eddy says in Science and Health (p. 329), "A little leaven leavens the whole lump," and I pray daily for this leavening. I am very grateful to the dear friends who first told me of Christian Science and grateful to the practitioners who have helped and encouraged me.

It gives me great pleasure to be able to write a testimony of my healing through Christian Science. About six years ago I suffered for many weeks from appendicitis and during that time was treated by a well-known physician, who declared that an operation was the only means of relief. At this time Christian Science was brought to my notice; I consented to have absent treatments, and was healed. In two weeks' time I was able to go to the practitioner. He advised me to read "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mrs. Eddy, and before the book was read half through I laid aside glasses which had been worn for nine years, and have not had them on since.

I am grateful indeed to God for this wonderful healing and to our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for making the truth known to the world. I am grateful for the daily protection experienced through Christian Science and for our periodicals.—(Mrs.) NELLIE A. EDES, Woronoco, Mass.

It is with deepest gratitude I write of my experience in Christian Science. My little girl, aged three years, was very quickly and beautifully healed of a severe attack of dysentery. She awakened early one Sunday morning in great pain, with no control over the bowels. In a few hours she was unconscious, and lay in this condition all day. I was filled with fear, having only recently commenced to study Christian Science. The practitioner I knew was away during the day but gave treatment immediately upon her return in the evening. All sense of fear and anxiety disappeared. At three o'clock on Monday morning baby knew me and asked for milk, and by midday she was playing in her cot quite happily. She had no return of the pain and was able to eat her usual meals. In a very short time she was out at play, as normal as before this experience.

Christian Science has healed me of depression caused through great sorrow. Words cannot express the beautiful sense of joy and freedom which the daily study of the Bible and Science and Health brings. I am profoundly grateful for Christian Science, and to loving friends who are helping me to understand it.—(Mrs.) MARGARET DELICATE, Headley, Epsom, England.

With thankfulness to God I would like to tell what Christian Science has done for me. I was a very sick woman and the doctor could not do anything for me. One day I went to see a young woman who had come home from the hospital after having had two operations without being benefited. She had taken up Christian Science and was healed. When I went home I thought that if God had healed her He would heal me, so I asked for help from a practitioner and had three treatments. This was on Saturday and on Monday I could do my washing. This was five years ago. After getting some little understanding of Christian Science I have been able to help myself and have been healed of floating kidney, sore throat, and eczema.

For all these healings I am very grateful. I am trying to live each day so as to be worthy of the talent God has given me, that it may multiply a hundredfold for the good of humanity, and to the glory of God.

Christian Science is now and always has been my all. I have never had any medical treatment, and am certainly grateful for the proof of divine protection. Throughout my school experience many problems have proved to me God's ever presence. I am now a junior in college and owe every day's happiness to Christian Science. A belief in boils, inharmonious action of organs of the body, colds, sleeplessness, worry, lack of all kinds have been met beautifully, and are a few of the many proofs which I have had of the healing efficacy of Christian Science. I have witnessed many instantaneous healings, as well as others which seemed slow. I know that Christian Science heals, and humbly and sincerely hope that this may help another. I am grateful for the opportunity of writing this testimony and thus expressing my gratitude for Christian Science.

That Truth is omnipresent has been proved to me. Once in need of help I tried to get a friend on the telephone but did not succeed. In telling her later she answered me thus: "Truth can always be found." Those few words became such a great help to me. One Saturday afternoon my family and I went to a farm on a visit over Sunday, expecting to leave on the early train Monday morning, but that morning my three small children were very sick. It looked like a case of poisoning, and I was almost overcome with fear. Looking over that small telephone directory on the farm I did not know where to turn. If I only had brought a Christian Science Journal with me I could have found the address of some practitioner. Then I remembered my dear friend's words, "Truth can always be found." I called the farmer's daughter who was working in a near-by town and told her to ask the lady she worked for if she knew of a Christian Scientist. Instead of calling me that lady called a practitioner and asked her to call the farm, and it did not seem more than one minute until the telephone rang and the practitioner was speaking to me. All fear left, the children got well that day, and we left the farm on the early train Tuesday morning. Oh, how thankful I am for the truth.—(Mrs.) Helga Sandels, Chicago, Ill.

It is five years since I began the study of Christian Science and so much good has come to me and my family through it that I wish to acknowledge some of the blessings received. I have two daughters, the elder four years, and neither one has ever tasted medicine. I have relied wholly on the truth, and when rightly applied it has never failed. I have had numerous healings, of tonsillitis, bowel trouble, burns, toothache, and other complaints, some requiring the help of a practitioner. With the children, convulsions and severe colds have been overcome almost instantly.

I want to express my gratitude for the work done by a Christian Science practitioner when one of my children was born. The ninety-first psalm has been such a comfort to me. I am also very grateful to our dear Leader for "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." Of the many blessings received I am most grateful for the spiritual uplift, as I enjoy reading the Bible now, whereas before I read it because I thought it my duty.

For over seven years I had been suffering from stomach, bowel, and internal disorders, nervousness, and other discords too numerous to mention, without any relief whatever from the various physicians I visited. About two years and a half ago, I heard of Christian Science, and, man's extremity being God's opportunity, I took up the subject heart and soul to find out just what it contained. I learned these truths: "To those leaning on the sustaining infinite, to-day is big with blessings" (Science and Health, Pref. p. vii), and also that God, good, is an ever present help in trouble. Since then all discordant conditions have passed into their native nothingness. My little girl had pneumonia twice, and I relied upon Christian Science absolutely; also sore throat and influenza have been overcome both by my husband and little ones, only through declaring and realizing the truth, which makes free.

I am very grateful to God for all the healings and blessings, and very grateful to Mrs. Eddy for having left us such a wealth of literature, which is a source of comfort to those seeking the truth—especially the Lesson-Sermons. I am also grateful to the practitioner who so lovingly helped me to see the light.—(Mrs.) Rose Cohen, Brooklyn, N. Y.

In giving my testimony of all the benefits received through Christian Science, I would like to tell how God led me to it almost three years ago. My husband being ill, the doctor ordered us to go to the country, and so we rented, in the suburbs of Geneva, an apartment in a house occupied by several tenants. Just opposite us there lived two ladies, a mother and her daughter. We often met them in the garden and among their visitors was one who specially attracted our attention, and I learned that she was a Christian Scientist. I loved God, the Christ, and the gospel which I was trying to put into practice, but I must say I did not know anything of Christian Science. I was introduced to this lady and she spoke to me about it and earnestly advised me to procure the textbook by Mrs. Eddy, which I did. My progress was slow. After much patience and perseverance a practitioner succeeded in helping me to understand these ideas which were entirely new to me. I then saw that it was not sufficient for me to read; I must study and above all I must meditate on the precious book which she had placed in my hands. The more I progressed, the more I appreciated its value. Now I can say in all sincerity that we can never be grateful enough to the noble woman, Mrs. Eddy, for the wonderful light she has thrown on our Master's words.

During this time the faithful practitioner was treating my husband and with God's help he has now resumed his own studies which he had to give up after a great nervous stress. An attack of influenza and several other ailments were also overcome. As for myself, a short while ago I had a severe congestion of the eye; it was so red and inflamed that those around me became quite anxious. Naturally I tried to overcome the error since I knew it was a false belief that had to be dismissed peremptorily as one would a temptation. But as I was suffering a great deal I did not feel strong enough for the task, so a practitioner came and freed me from the belief of pain; then I slept perfectly. Three days later, to my great joy, the eye was normal again.

I cannot find words to adequately express my gratitude for God's infinite mercy and goodness. May we give thanks to Him for the deliverance and all the blessings we have received of Him. May thanksgiving spring from our hearts. "The vital part, the heart and soul of Christian Science, is Love," says Mrs. Eddy (Science and Health, p. 113). Then it is only in the measure that we demonstrate our love for God and our fellow men that we really are Christian Scientists.—(Mrs.) M. Nicole, Geneva, Switzerland.

I wish to testify to the saving and healing power of Christian Science. I began to study it because I wanted more light on the Bible and wanted to know God. I found it wonderfully illuminated the Scriptures and that it is the only way to our Father in heaven. Incidentally I was cured of swollen legs and bowel trouble. Afterwards I was treated by a practitioner for catarrh and other ailments. Just recently I have been treated for bronchial catarrh and sciatic rheumatism and completely cured. For these blessings I am deeply grateful to God, to Mrs. Eddy, who has discovered this wonderful truth, and to those kind friends who have helped me along the way.

I wish to express my gratitude for what Christian Science has done, is doing, and will do for all who apply this truth to every need. I came into Christian Science for physical healing, not knowing that it is the stream of living waters. I had been sick and almost helpless for eight months. The doctors said that an operation was the only hope for me. I told them there would be no operation, that I would just die as I was. The next day I suffered untold agony from an abscess in the rectum, and other complications. I was asked, Why not try Christian Science? I knew nothing of Christian Science, but that it healed. I talked with a Scientist. She said, "Come to my apartment in the morning." I replied that I was not able to walk. But to my surprise I was, as it were, lifted up and put into the stream of Life, Truth, and Love, and was healed.

I came back and cast out all the medicine I had been bowing down to, and worked in accord with the First Commandment, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." Everything was beautiful to me. The sun coming into my room seemed to tell of the sunlight of Truth whereby I could see to cleanse my thoughts of all error. I am indeed very grateful for this beautiful truth,—to know God, here and now,—and to Mrs. Eddy for being so true and faithful to the teachings of Christ Jesus and that she could pave the way for all through "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures."—(Mrs.) CARRIE PERKINS, Cleveland, Ohio.

I wish to express my gratitude for what Christian Science has done for me. Before I took up the study of this wonderful truth I had been miserable for thirty years or more. I was a slave to medicine, and doctors told me I would always have to take it as there was no cure for me. The claim was chronic bowel trouble. I had to take medicine almost every day. Besides I had other claims, such as headaches, backaches, and kidney trouble. I did not know what a real well day was until I took up the study of Christian Science, and my heart rejoices in our daily Lesson-Sermon. Through the study of the Bible and "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" I have been healed of all my troubles. My heart overflows with love and gratitude to God and our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, for leading me into this beautiful light, and my daily prayer to God is for more light and spiritual understanding.

I send my testimony with the desire to benefit some one. I have been healed of so many physical troubles I cannot mention them all, but will give a few, which were wonderful to me. The healing of a ruptured blood vessel was accomplished through my own understanding of the truth, without the aid of a practitioner. With the aid of a practitioner I was brought out of convulsions preceding childbirth. The doctor in attendance made the remark, "I have lost two cases similar to yours." Bleeding piles and extreme dizziness were also overcome. My baby was healed of intestinal indigestion.

Some of my healings were instantaneous, while others required a great deal of prayer and fasting. For all this I am very thankful to God, whose love for us gave us again "the Spirit of truth" through Mrs. Eddy.

MRS. FRED C. SICKLES, El Reno, Okla.

The study of the Bible in connection with Mrs. Eddy's writings, has brought me the true sense of peace, health, and happiness. Therefore I gratefully acknowledge Christian Science to be the one big blessing which has come into my life. Through the help of a loving practitioner, severe chronic sick headaches of many years' standing have been completely healed. Bronchitis, sore throat, and stubborn coughs and colds have also yielded, and the fear of them is fast fading away. In an automobile accident, when the danger, to mortal sense, seemed very real, the protective power of Truth was declared, and beautifully demonstrated.

The thought of God as intelligence, and of the perfect man as reflection, has been especially helpful to me, in solving the many problems which seem to arise in following a chosen profession. Indeed, I find my endeavors more fruitful in every way when I stop to realize that "I can of mine own self do nothing." The study of the daily Lesson-Sermon is bringing me freedom from worry, depression, lack, and resentment, and I am beginning to understand what it means to forgive and forget. I am deeply grateful for every activity of Christian Science, and for the practical and demonstrable understanding of God which Truth has unfolded to me.—(Miss) RILLA THOMPSON, Portland, Ore.

To adequately express my thanks for what Christian Science has done for me and mine would necessitate the writing of a long manuscript, so many have been the benefits received. When I was a young chap seventeen years old, I was crushed between an elevator and the floor. I was rushed to an emergency hospital where an examination disclosed a broken neck. Physicians at the hospital refused to touch me, stating that I would be dead within a few minutes. As soon as I was injured my mother was telephoned to, and she in turn telephoned to a practitioner who immediately started to work for me, so that by the time I reached the hospital I was receiving Christian Science treatment. The broken bones were set and I was put to bed. In six weeks' time I was completely healed, discharged from the hospital and was back at work shortly afterward.

Since that time Christian Science has been my only physician. Our three children have all received manifold blessings and we are extremely grateful for the truth as taught in Christian Science. Burns, fevers, influenza, and other claims have all been met. I am very grateful to be serving as First Reader in our little community gathering, although no church has as yet been organized. We meet each Sunday and have the Lesson-Sermon, carrying on the services as directed in our Church Manual. Thankful indeed am I for the knowledge that God is an ever ready source of supply and that all I have to do to avail myself of God's bounty is to apply the truth.

My desire is to know more of God and His truth.

R. F. CHESEBRO, Brawley, Calif.

For the benefit of some one who might be in the same condition that I was in when Christian Science found me I want to tell of some of the blessings that have come to my home through the understanding of divine Love. Over two years ago Christian Science found me suffering from heart disease, rheumatism, stomach trouble, headaches, and other ailments. I thought I had completely lost out. Four of my children had passed away, after which my companion who was so dear to me passed on, and although I thought I was a Christian and belonged to the true church, I found out that God, when I needed Him most, did not seem to hear me. This so crazed me I attempted suicide twice, after which I happened to have a conversation with a Christian Scientist which caused me to begin reading Christian Science literature, and the scales began falling from my eyes. I borrowed a copy of the textbook and read and prayed almost day and night. Soon I noticed the heart disease was gone, then I noticed that rheumatism among other discordant conditions was fading away. By this time my medicines, which would have made a small drug store, were thrown away and my first demonstration of the truth was made,—my baby, about three years old, was healed completely of croup.

The greatest spiritual uplift in life for me was when I understood God to be ever present good, ready to help me in every need. So like Philip when he was baptized, I went on my way rejoicing, demonstrating the truth every day. I have not words to express how good divine Love has been to me.—J. M. ALLEN, Saint Jo, Texas.

Signs of the Times

[Annual Report of American Bible Society]

The annual report of the American Bible Society shows that over 3,400,000 volumes were issued during 1919. Of these about 350,000 were Bibles, 550,000 Testaments, and 2,500,000 portions of Scriptures. Nearly 140,000,000 Scriptures have been issued by the Society during its history of one hundred and four years. During the World War 6,678,301 Testaments were distributed among the belligerent forces of all nations.

A novel feature of the year is the completion for the Chinese of the great Mandarin Version of the Bible, which has cost several hundred thousand dollars and took twenty-five years of work on the part of the translators. This version makes the Bible accessible to over four hundred million people, or one-fourth the population of the entire world—more people than were ever reached by any one translation in the history of the world.

[Paul S. Leinbach, D. D., editor, The Reformed Church Messenger]

If ever there was a day when the Protestant forces of our land needed wise, broad-minded, and far-seeing leadership, this is the day. Never were there so many young people in America growing up without moral and spiritual nurture. Never was there such imminent peril of an untrained generation, never such a rapid increase in juvenile crime. Surely it is high time to convict the Church of God of its folly in bestowing ninety-five per cent of its attention upon an adult membership whose habits are largely fixed and a paltry remainder of its attention upon the boys and girls who are the hope of the future.

We believe that the golden day of the Sunday school is not in the past, but is just coming. In this institution in which we gather for worship, for instruction in the things of God, and for training in the service of mankind, we have a unique opportunity to put the accent upon the things that really count most and thus to give the highest temper to the Christian thought and life of the coming days.

Can we not believe there is a special challenge for the leadership of the Sunday school in sowing the seeds of unity and peace? The Church of God will never succeed in calming the storms in tempest tossed human hearts and in our war racked society, until it breaks the fetters of provincialism and parochialism and realizes in its own life "the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace."

[Craig S. Thoms, Ph. D., in The Biblical World]

Men must be summoned to stand with Christ, for our day is luminous with light from Christ upon all the relationships of life. What is Christian? It is Christian for employers to take lesser profits and pay more wages in order that workmen may have not only a livelihood but a worthful life. It is Christian for employees to work for employers as they would work for themselves. It is Christian for consumers to stop hunting bargains, in order to eliminate sweatshops. It is Christian for merchants to hold profiteering little above highway robbery. It is Christian for great corporations to strike a fair balance between prices, profits, and wages. It is Christian for lawmakers to legislate against their own financial interests, in order that all the people may have a "square deal."

The question here is not one of classes but of bringing the conduct of all classes to the standard of Christ. The doing of this involves the very fundamentals of our civilization. The profiteer suffers greater moral degeneration than does he who pays the extra price. Corporations cannot enslave workmen without enslaving their own spirits. Workmen cannot loaf on their jobs without deforming their manhood. No one can purchase too cheap goods, knowing that their cheapness means for some one too long hours and too small pay, without lowering the tone of his own humanity.

Letters of Appreciation

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. One such letter follows:

LET me add a few words of appreciation for this wonderful paper. We have had this much beloved paper in our home most every day since its first issue and now we cannot do without it. We have three boys to whom THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR was a great help in their schooling in a great many ways. The youngest won a prize (first prize) from the inspiration received from this paper—liberty prize, so called, among two hundred contestants. Space or time would not allow me to point out the many, many qualities of this wonderful paper that differ so from other papers. I shall call it a purifier of the home; not only giving us the news of the world but also carrying with it "healing in its wings," and on the Home Forum page we find an article that heals. An interesting experience happened to me a few years ago,—early one morning as I was on my way to work, I felt ill and in need of help. I stood on the curbstone, in the outskirts of the city, trying to decide whether to go home or not, when a small piece of paper commencing to flutter in the road, right opposite me, drew my attention. I could not help going over to pick it up and what do you suppose it was? Why, a small piece of the metaphysical article from THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR. I read it and was healed, gained strength and went on to my work. One more thing you may like to know. In coming to this city I first looked for a place near by from which to get the MONITOR, and I found they sold it, with other papers, at a drug store,—quite a large one too. So one night it was my pleasure as well as great surprise to have the owner of the store talk to me about THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR (he seeing my eagerness for it and great disappointment when they were all sold). These are his words in part, "Read it through every day, for it gives you news that you don't get in any other paper, and reliable news. When you get newspapers of the other kind, and it does not make any difference which one you take, they are all the same—same news under different headings, et cetera." I could tell of many other cases but have not space; and I give this out with a heart filled with gratitude for the good work this messenger of Truth (the Christ) is doing throughout the world.

"What I say unto you I say unto all, WATCH." Jesus

VOLUME XXII AUGUST 28, 1920 NUMBER 52

About the Father's Business

BERNICE W. CARTER

WHEN Jesus gave utterance to that great question which revealed the keynote of his human experience, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" what was it that Mary and Joseph had found him doing? In Luke's gospel we read: "And it came to pass, that after three days they found him in the temple, sitting in the midst of the doctors, both hearing them, and asking them questions. And all that heard him were astonished at his understanding and answers." Although to mortals Jesus was at that time only a boy twelve years of age, he had already developed in human consciousness the true idea of service. Joseph was a carpenter, and so to none of those who heard Jesus at the time did his words convey any meaning, except perhaps to Mary, who, the record tells us, "kept all these sayings in her heart." During his three years' ministry, however, it became clear to many what his "Father's business" was. "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work," he said in answer to the Jews who persecuted him for healing the impotent man on the Sabbath day; and notwithstanding persecution, —the ever more aggressive opposition to the Christ, Truth, —he healed the sick, cleansed lepers, raised the dead, and cast out devils, correcting through his spiritual understanding of the allness of God every lie of mortal mind which was presented to him. Moreover he said that every one who believed on him—that is, who really understood his teachings—should do the works which he did—and greater works.

It is upon this promise of the Master's that Christian Science depends for proof of its divinity. Jesus left no written instructions or rules for healing, and although his disciples and those who understood his teachings healed the sick and raised the dead for about three centuries after the ascension, still the fundamental rule back of the healing effects was wrapped in mystery, so far as the lay mind was concerned, until to Mary Baker Eddy came the revelation and the divine command, as voiced by the prophet Isaiah, "Now go, write it before them in a table, and note it in a book, that it may be for the time to come for ever and ever." Thus it was that "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" came to be written. In it Mrs. Eddy reveals the spiritual laws which govern true living—the ever operative Principle of all that really is. And as Moses, through the moral law which he inscribed on tables of stone, led the children of Israel out of their slavery and Egyptian darkness, so Mrs. Eddy through her writings is leading mankind to-day out of their misery, sickness, and sin.

True service, however, does not always or necessarily imply that one must be a teacher or leader of multitudes. There must of necessity be way-showers and pioneers, but the task of following in the way marked out is also of prime importance, lest the work of the way-shower and pioneer be lost to mankind. Every individual, for instance, who day by day is exemplifying in his living the Beatitudes and the Golden Rule, is as truly about the "Father's business" as was the Master himself, and upon his sincerity and consistent striving will depend his progress toward the degree of spiritual understanding which Jesus manifested. His whole life will then be an expression of the prayer: "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." Equally true is it that the progress of the Christian Scientist depends upon his demonstration of the healing power which accompanies the understanding of Mrs. Eddy's teachings. In a wonderfully lucid article entitled "The Way," beginning on page 355 of "Miscellaneous Writings," Mrs. Eddy says, "Less teaching and good healing is to-day the acme of 'well done'; a healing that is not guesswork,—chronic recovery ebbing and flowing,—but instantaneous cure. This absolute demonstration of Science must be revived." Then, anticipating the human query, "But how?" she delineates the three stages of growth through which mankind must pass before reaching the spiritual height where healing work is effectively and instantaneously accomplished. Most clearly she shows that one's own thought must be purified and strengthened through self-knowledge, true humility, and love. "The way," she says in conclusion, "is absolute Christian Science: walk ye in it; but remember that Science is demonstrated by degrees, and our demonstration rises only as we rise in the scale of being."

The life history of Mrs. Eddy, as recorded by Sibyl Wilbur, is of intense interest, not only to the casual reader but especially to the student of Christian Science faithfully following the light which has pierced the gloom of his mortal thinking. In it the reader sees the human steps and processes by which our Leader was herself led and prepared so that she could rise "in the scale of being" to the point where she not only could perceive but could formulate and give to the world the rules for Christianly scientific living and the helps along the way which she saw that the strugglers would need. In the record of her years of preparation the student finds that even the divinely appointed leaders of the workers in Truth's vineyard are spared no experience, however hard, in the journey to the summit of demonstration. In the words of the poet Holland:—

> We rise by the things that are under our feet;
> By what we have mastered of good and gain;
> By the pride deposed and the passion slain,
> And the vanquished ills that we hourly meet;

and the Christian Scientist recognizes such hourly vanquishing of pride, passion, and the ills of the flesh in his own experience, as the "Father's business" and a preparation for the "greater works" of which the Master spoke.

When it becomes apparent to the student how much overcoming of self, how much purification of thought and motive is essential before sufficient spiritual understanding is attained to make even the least demonstration of the power of Truth, he begins dimly to appreciate the character and labor of our Leader and the height to which she rose, according to the testimony of her works. At the same time he realizes that a demonstration which is the result of such preparation as was hers, and founded so squarely on Principle, is established forever, that "nothing can be put to it, nor any thing taken from it," and "the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Quite naturally, then, comes the recognition of the permanence of Mrs. Eddy's gifts to the world and of his duty and privileges as a follower. The way is ever clear to the earnest of purpose, and he has ever this comforting assurance which Mrs. Eddy wrote to one of her students (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 157): "Error has no power but to destroy itself. It cannot harm you; it cannot stop the eternal currents of Truth." Then, too, to faithful followers comes her benediction (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 151): "Ye are a chosen people, whose God is—what? Even All. May mercy and truth go before you: may the lamp of your life continually be full of oil, and you be wedded to the spiritual idea, Christ; then will you heal, and teach, and preach, on the ascending scale of everlasting Life and Love."

Honesty and Power

EDITH BOWERS

IN "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, on page 453 we read: "Honesty is spiritual power. Dishonesty is human weakness, which forfeits divine help." Here are two clear statements of facts so clear and so concise that there is no possibility of misunderstanding. What is this spiritual power which can only be obtained by absolute honesty? The word power means ability to act, strength, force, energy, command. The word spiritual is derived from Spirit, and Spirit is God; therefore spiritual power is the power which comes from God, and must of necessity be wholly good. That is, it must be the ability, strength, force, energy, command, influence, to prove here and now the supremacy of good over every claim of evil.

Every sincere student of Christian Science desires to express this spiritual power which will enable one to prove the nothingness of every erroneous belief, and consequently must have that honesty of purpose which is so essential to success. The dictionary defines honesty as uprightness, veracity, honor, justice; therefore to be honest means far more than to refrain from actually stealing one's neighbor's goods. It means to be upright and honorable in our dealings, to speak the truth at all times, and to be fair and just to our fellow men. More than this, it means to think honestly, to think along that straight line of Principle which knows no swerving either to the right hand or to the left. To gain and hold this honest thinking calls for constant alertness and examination of one's motives and acts, for evil tries to use many ways to accomplish its designs, and clothes dishonesty in alluring garments until it looks innocent and legitimate to the unwary.

To seek power for personal aims and ambitions is inconceivable in any one with the slightest knowledge of metaphysics. It is as absurd as it would be in a mathematician deliberately to attempt to work out his problems contrary to the rules governing mathematics. Every metaphysician must know that the moment he swerves one iota from the straight line of honesty in thought, word, or deed, that moment he loses proportionately his power to help either himself or others, and he is manifesting that human weakness which is the inevitable result of dishonesty, and which forfeits divine help.

In Science and Health (p. 313) Mrs. Eddy says, "Jesus of Nazareth was the most scientific man that ever trod the globe." Jesus was thus the personification of honesty and fearlessness. The perfectly honest man is always fearless, always ready to come out in the open. Being honest there is nothing to hide. It is dishonesty that is fearful of the world, of its criticisms and opinions. The scribes and the Pharisees, whispering and planning, treacherously seeking to lay some stigma of reproach on the best and purest man who ever lived, were the personification of dishonesty. Here we have the two opposite phases of thought: honesty, as expressed by Jesus,—which is scientific and has spiritual power,—and dishonesty, as expressed by the scribes and Pharisees,—which is unscientific and is morally weak.

The picture of Jesus as a boy, talking with the doctors in the temple at Jerusalem, is familiar to most of us. There we see depicted on the faces of the materially learned men about him thoughts of doubt and the multitude of contending emotions of mortal mind. In startling contrast the artist brings out the face of the boy Jesus. The beautiful clear eyes, alight with spiritual understanding, express that purity and honesty which knows no vestige of fear or doubt. It is this absolutely fearless honesty which confers that spiritual power mankind is so much in need of to-day, and before which every evil belief must disappear into nothingness. Evil is ever ready to suggest some compromise with Principle, but each individual who steadfastly refuses to listen to its subtle suggestions is helping to bring in the millennium. On the other hand, if one is tempted to deviate in the slightest from the right and honest course, it is well to remember the words of Paul to the Galatians, "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

Like a Dream

G. HENRY BRUMELL

THE remark is often heard, "Oh, it is all like a dream now that it is over." This may apply equally to a pleasant or unpleasant experience. The speaker may be an out and out materialist, yet has voiced a metaphysical truth. Once the student gets a grasp of the teachings of Christian Science and hence sees the spiritual in place of materiality, —in other words, the real instead of the unreal,—then all the seeming trials and troubles of whatever magnitude or however apparently crushing, are seen not as the reality of being, but as part of "the waking dream of mortal existence," of which Mrs. Eddy says on page 250 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures": "A mortal may be weary or pained, enjoy or suffer, according to the dream he entertains in sleep. When that dream vanishes, the mortal finds himself experiencing none of these dream-sensations. To the observer, the body lies listless, undisturbed, and sensationless, and the mind seems absent. Now I ask, Is there any more reality in the waking dream of mortal existence than in the sleeping dream?"

Disasters, calamities, upheavals, and such like, whether political, social, of business or of private life, which before seemed so real and insurmountable, are now recognized at their true value, as a mortal dream, out of which we are gradually awakening as the light of Christian Science breaks in, dispelling the thick mists of mortal belief. As the truth dawns on us that God, good, is Spirit, and that His creation, including man made in His image and likeness, is not only spiritual but perfect; that He could not bring into existence, could not bring forth or cause anything unlike Himself; that He created everything that was created, and "behold, it was very good,"—it at once becomes obvious that anything which is not good is outside God's creation, in fact has never been created. This being so, the truth about the dream is clearly seen, that it is only a false, mortal belief, unknown and unrecognized by Spirit, God. God never created evil. He is, as Habakkuk states, "of purer eyes than to behold evil;" besides God is Love, omnipresent, filling all space. Thus we begin to grasp the glorious truth that all evil is unreal because untrue. In "Retrospection and Introspection" (p. 21) Mrs. Eddy declares: "It is well to know, dear reader, that our material, mortal history is but the record of dreams, not of man's real existence, and the dream has no place in the Science of being. It is 'as a tale that is told,' and 'as the shadow when it declineth.'"

The sleeping dream may seem very real whilst it lasts, and so may seem this dream of mortal and material life, but when we know it is only a poor counterfeit of man's true existence and understand the truth that it is impossible for the real man to experience anything unlike God, good, then all these false beliefs of discord will disappear. "If ye continue in my word . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," said Christ Jesus,—free from the seeming reality of all that is unlike God. Once we know the truth about anything, false beliefs on the subject are destroyed, and it must follow that the same fact is equally applicable to discord of every description. When we know that harmony is the reality, we at the same time know that inharmony,—discord, evil,—is unreal; and if unreal why allow it any place? Cast it out, destroy it by knowing the truth about it. When we awake from a dream, be it a pleasant or unpleasant one, we know it was but a dream; in the same way when we awake to recognize mortal life, the false belief in intelligent matter, to be nothing but a dream, then our seeming cares, troubles, and worries fade away into their native nothingness.

On page 230 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy writes: "If sickness is real, it belongs to immortality; if true, it is a part of Truth. Would you attempt with drugs, or without, to destroy a quality or condition of Truth? But if sickness and sin are illusions, the awakening from this mortal dream, or illusion, will bring us into health, holiness, and immortality. This awakening is the forever coming of Christ, the advanced appearing of Truth, which casts out error and heals the sick." Therefore let us respond to Paul's stirring appeal to the Ephesians, "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light."

Complete Harmony

E. ISABEL BERTSCHY

MUSIC is more than pleasant sounds for the ear. As Mrs. Eddy says: "What shall we say of the mighty conquest over all sin? A louder song, sweeter than has ever before reached high heaven, now rises clearer and nearer to the great heart of Christ; for the accuser is not there, and Love sends forth her primal and everlasting strain" (Science and Health, p. 568). One's very living is a song of gratitude if one is attuned to the divine Principle of being. Man reflects harmoniously that perfect Principle. Life, with its accompaniment of hope and joy, is manifest as the constant appearing of God's perfect idea, and this unfolding is the eternal music of the spheres. As we keep our thoughts filled with Life, Truth, and Love, we make of our lives symphonies of greater beauty than have ever been heard by human ear. It was this absolute Principle of harmony which enabled Jesus to behold the unbroken rhythm of health and happiness, abundance and goodness, as man. To understand and recognize the unadulterated truth of Christian Science is to produce concord instead of discord, health and freedom in place of bondage; and mortals may thus gain a glimpse of that wonderful dawn of the new heaven and the new earth which John beheld.

There is no discord of the carnal world that Love cannot completely heal by the application of the truth that man is spiritually alive in good. Sin, disease, and death—fear of any kind—presuppose a vacuum where God's law does not penetrate. His law, however, governs the infinitude of harmonious idea, in which there is no vacuum. Discords come only when mortals make unto themselves graven images of inharmony, want, disease, and all those other myriad forms of error. As we gain a greater understanding of the spiritual universe and spiritual man, there comes a realization that complete harmony is a steadfast fact which is never disturbed, even amid the discords of sense testimony. It is a false supposition that evil, in whatever disguise, can touch any part of the perfect creation of God. Then to know this means that we consciously rejoice in the fact of harmony right here and now. The student of Christian Science proves his religion by destroying all evidence of error, such as sickness, poverty, loss, and death. In proportion to his understanding of the truth, he shows forth to others that absolute freedom from discord.

On page 12 of her poems Mrs. Eddy has clothed this thought in words of extreme beauty:—

O'er waiting harpstrings of the mind
There sweeps a strain,
Low, sad, and sweet, whose measures bind
The power of pain,

And wake a white-winged angel throng
Of thoughts, illumed
By faith, and breathed in raptured song,
With love perfumed.

Progress of Distribution

ERNEST HENRY RAILTON

IN whatever field of activity the student of Christian Science finds himself engaged, it is one of the privileges of his work that he should find his reward by recognizing the fruits of the good seed he has been permitted to sow. "Cast thy bread upon the waters: for thou shalt find it after many days." These words might be accepted as a motto by any distributor of Christian Science literature. Whether he be at work as one of a committee, or whether as an individual he be distributing to friends whom he believes to be interested in the subject, he is undoubtedly bringing glimpses of Christian Science and its healing work to many who have been groping in the dark. "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand: for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good," says the wise man. Mrs. Eddy, too, encourages us with the words (Science and Health, p. 158), "Evidences of progress and of spiritualization greet us on every hand."

At the end of 1918, at the time of President Wilson's trip to Europe, six copies of The Christian Science Monitor with articles on his journey were dispatched to the Dominions by the writer. In the course of a few months a response was received from three of the correspondents, telling of work done by them in Christian Science, though nothing had been heard of them for more than a year. Some few months later another batch of papers was sent out by the same individual distributor, and in the course of a fortnight acknowledgments were received from six recipients, thanking the sender. When, twelve months later, copies were distributed of what appeared to be an exceptionally interesting article the replies were no longer merely expressions of gratitude but statements by the recipients of their condition of thought at the time they wrote and either expressions of gratitude for blessings already received in Christian Science or intimations that they were ready to apply the healing truth to the conditions in which they found themselves.

"Progress is born of experience," writes Mrs. Eddy in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 296), and the above quoted experiences in the reception of the periodicals have been a great encouragement to continue the good work already begun and a proof that the divine blessing awaits the patience and perseverance of those who follow the bidding of our dear Leader in spreading the gospel of good news. Whatever may be the experiences of the Christian Scientist, no material obstacle, no physical hindrance, however oppressive it may appear, can weigh against the activities of Truth and Love. It matters not what may seem to hamper present progress, Truth, sending forth heavenly messages to a weary, waiting world, is constantly at work, and in giving to others the cup of cold water one finds that he has gained his own happiness and healing.

The Journey

SUSETTE KUHN

THROUGH his endeavors to make practical his understanding of Truth, to apply the law of God in solving every problem of his daily life, the Christian Scientist is continuously progressing in the way of holiness. The enthusiasm of the explorer, the glad surprise of beholding novel scenes, the zest of right activity, furnish the traveler with constant cause for gratitude. Let us not be so intent on the goal of the journey, the complete answer to our problem, that we miss the joy of experiencing to the full the unfolding of spiritual ideas along each step of the way. Mrs. Eddy tells us what a glorious opportunity is ours, to-day, when she writes on page 158 of Miscellany, "We live in an age of Love's divine adventure to be All-in-all."

Though our individual aims vary, all of us aspire to reach the goal of complete fulfillment. Whether our need is for better health, more congenial surroundings, wider opportunity for the expression of artistic talent; whether we are suffering from a belief in poverty or sorrow, or whether it is sin in its obvious or more subtle forms that is troubling us—whatever it may be that confronts us, we know that the solution to our problem is in Mind, and that we gain the correct answer when we look wholly to Truth and not to human will for assistance.

Prayer is the means of advancement by which we are carried forward from imperfection to perfection. Because the disciples realized this they asked the Master to teach them to pray. "Desire is prayer," Mrs. Eddy tells us (Science and Health, p. 1); "and no loss can occur from trusting God with our desires, that they may be moulded and exalted before they take form in words and in deeds." So these Christian pilgrims yearned for that divine instruction which would show them how to desire. They appealed not to the personal Jesus, but to the Christ, and received a perfect answer in the Lord's Prayer. As we repeat the words of this prayer with increased spiritual understanding, looking to the Christ for our answer instead of to the corporeal Savior, we, too, shall see the perfect fulfillment of our sincere desire.

As Christian Scientists we should fully expect to receive the answer to our prayers. The first point, then, for us to decide is, are our prayers spiritual? Unless they are, the answer will not be forthcoming. Do we pray from a material viewpoint, expecting Spirit to supply the answer? In the Bible we read, "Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts." The spiritual desire, however, is always indissolubly connected with the source of all supply, Spirit, God.

Do we pray for the recovery of the sick and sinful with a heart so overflowing with compassion for our neighbor that we lose all sense of self in the loving desire to be the channel for the expression of God's goodness and mercy to his children? Error would attempt to fool us into supposing our motives are entirely pure, when perhaps they are mixed with worldly ambition to succeed. If in one case we have quickly proved the availability of God's law to heal, in the next case does the suggestion of evil ever tempt us to fear that we may not be so successful this time, and not only fail to bring relief to the patient, but incidentally lose some of our self-esteem?

Every treatment is an expression of divine Love and we need to remember that the only real love is that which is synonymous with Principle. Then, in order to love our brother, we must be willing to eliminate whatever hinders us from clearly realizing the truth of being. Morbid self-contemplation leads nowhere, but healthy self-examination from the standpoint of Principle, the basis of all right action, does help us to start afresh on our task, happy in a new vision of scientific Truth. By the endeavor to cleanse our heart from evil, any attitude of smug complacency to latent error in thought is changed to one of aroused antagonism to whatever would prevent us from seeing the truth. Self-deceived we make little progress, but when we are awake to the error that needs to be overcome, we go forward with vigor.

The one way, then, for all of us to follow the Christ, is to spiritualize our desires. Our endeavors to do this must be indefatigable, else we shall wander from the true path into the byways of material sense. Having gained the right desire—the vision of the spiritual idea—the next step is to put this desire into practice; in other words, we must demonstrate or prove our understanding of Christ, Truth.

In this process, it is helpful to know that the right idea has its basis in Principle, consequently it is protected and governed by spiritual law. No mortal circumstance is able to prevent the natural development of divine activity. The spiritual idea, emanating from Mind is controlled by God and cannot be interfered with by hypnotic suggestions of evil. Its course is already determined by Mind, its creator, "and none can stay his hand, or say unto him, What doest thou?"

As we press forward in our work of putting this spiritual desire into practice, the landscape or conditions of human environment will vary from time to time, but we are continually conscious of the unchanging love of God, expressed in the guidance of Truth. In spite of the din and uproar about us, even when we are in the midst of the noise of conflicting human opinions, if we but listen for it we shall always hear the still, small voice of Spirit, encouraging and inspiring us with strength and confidence in the power of good.

Perhaps the task seems very burdensome, and the traveler is in a valley of difficulty, slowly and cautiously winding his way in obscure paths of mortal sense, forcing an opening through thickets of ignorance and fear, laboriously removing obstacles which at times appear to block his way completely. Beliefs of sickness, selfishness, pride, peculiarities of disposition calling themselves inherited tendencies, satisfaction in present conditions and reluctance to give up established habits of wrong thinking,—these and many other errors seem to make the way hard for him. By clinging steadfastly to his understanding of Principle, however, and holding thought persistently to the right idea, he faithfully pushes on, and soon emerges out of this tortuous path of mortal belief into a broad, pleasant place of spiritual unfoldment and fruition. Here he finds green pastures of peace, bright with the field flowers of humility and gratitude. Through his recent experience thought has become purified, and now he rests, serenely rejoicing in one more victory over self.

But not too long does the pilgrim tarry in any one place. Knowing that Spirit is the only attraction, he is ever inspired to continue his journey. The duties to be accomplished assume larger proportions, and now the traveler sees before him a range of mountains. He realizes there will be many peaks to cross before he gains the highest, the ultimate aim to which he aspires. He knows, too, that he cannot jump from one mountain top to another nor escape taking the intervening steps from one duty done to the completion of the next task. He can only reach these successive heights of pure consciousness by going resolutely up each mountain side. What though the way be rugged! After each ascent the traveler finds himself nearer to God, and the higher the peak the more infinitely lovely is the view, through spiritual perception.

As we journey onward we enjoy the sweet companionship of our fellow travelers. The interchange of friendly greetings and the recital of different experiences along the way broaden our viewpoint. We gladly help to bear one another's burdens, through knowing the truth for ourselves, and for others when they apply to us for assistance. We never become so absorbed in solving our own problems that we overlook our brother's need. It is the divine law of Love that heals, and the measure of our service to others shows how far we have advanced in the way of Life, Truth, and Love.

Mrs. Eddy, in her unselfish and tireless work for mankind, showed us how to pray unceasingly and how to trust our desires to God. She was willing to go unflinchingly and unswervingly, wherever the right idea, the vision of the Christ, led her. Let us bravely follow in her footsteps. It is a privilege fraught with wondrous possibilities. Our beloved Leader describes the course of our entire journey in these inspired words to The Mother Church (Message for 1902): "All Christian faith, hope, and prayer, all devout desire, virtually petition, Make me the image and likeness of divine Love."

Man

L. EMMETT SHERRED

O MAN, thou radiant likeness,
Noble, pure, forever perfect
Image of God,
Serene, though dark'ning clouds o'erspread
And thunders shake the universe,—
Thy thoughts are free.

O man, expression of brightness,—
Changeless, holy, knowing only
Eternal good,
Filled with peace, by Principle led
Where Love and Truth forever dwell,— God's child is he.

["The 'Former things' versus the Eternal"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., June 29, 1920]

Especially familiar to Christian Scientists is the vision described in the Apocalypse of "a new heaven and a new earth," wherein "there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away." And the prophet Isaiah, also speaking of the new heaven and new earth, tells us that "the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind." The significance of this promise is understood when the truth of Christian Science, as taught by Mrs. Eddy in the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," and in her other writings, is proved through practical application to the problems of everyday life, and it is seen, in the light of Christian Science, how, in the degree that it is demonstrated, the former things, the finite, sensuous, lying, material, sick concepts, all false and untrue, which formed the sand foundation of the old tempest-tossed world of materiality, absolutely disappear from consciousness. They are indeed "passed away," and shall not even be remembered nor come into mind, because that which is "passed away," which is proved false and without existence, self-evidently cannot be remembered. If it is not true now it never was true, and there is then nothing to be remembered. That which is now, the All-in-all, is without beginning, just as it is without end; it is the ever present and eternal I AM, of which Jesus bore witness when he said, "Before Abraham was, I am," and again when he prayed, "And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." It was as though he had said: Let that be seen as being expressed which has existed from all eternity, because of man's unity, his indestructible, inalienable, eternal relationship with his divine Principle, God.

Mrs. Eddy in Science and Health emphasizes again and again that "the infinite has no beginning. This word beginning," she says (p. 502), "is employed to signify the only,—that is, the eternal verity and unity of God and man, including the universe." So as each advance step is taken in the demonstration of Christian Science, as each material belief, each belief in material pleasure or pain is let go, the individual is simply awakening to the realization of the all-inclusiveness of infinite Mind; he is learning that Mind includes within itself all good, and that Mind's idea, man, is eternally sustained and maintained in Mind, and reflects every quality of Mind. He no longer remembers the "former things," for they are no part of his consciousness. He has simply found the beauty and bounty, the completeness, the wholeness, which infinite Mind forever includes. "Unfathomable Mind is expressed," Mrs. Eddy tells us on page 520 of Science and Health—is, not will be. So it is only for each one to recognize this infinite expression of infinite Mind, by means of the spiritual perception which is quickened through Christian Science.

In the same way, when a patient is healed through Christian Science, all that has happened is that some part of that which before beclouded his concept of being as the immaculate idea of the eternal divine Principle, God, is passed away; in other words, it is seen as never having existed except to the beclouded vision of the human mind, and just to the extent that the false concept is wiped away, exactly to that extent can the true concept be seen as being expressed. It is not that the patient has actually been sick and is healed, for if it were ever true that there was a sick man it would still be true, and healing would be impossible. Just as Jesus raised Lazarus through the understanding that Lazarus had never died, so Christian Science heals the so-called sick through the understanding that man, God's image and likeness, never has been and never could be less than perfect. The patient is healed in Christian Science when the false belief is destroyed through the understanding of man's true being as the perfect expression of the perfect Mind which created him. In other words, that which is interpreted as healing is simply the perception of that which has existed from all eternity, man the image and likeness of his Father-Mother God.

"In St. John's vision," Mrs. Eddy writes, "heaven and earth stand for spiritual ideas, and the sea, as a symbol of tempest-tossed human concepts advancing and receding, is represented as having passed away" (Science and Health, p. 536). So to the one healed in Christian Science, these "tempest-tossed human concepts" have disappeared, and exactly in the degree that these false concepts have disappeared, just to that degree is seen the spiritual idea, man, including the universe, and this may appear to be a new heaven and a new earth, though it is new only in that it is newly perceived by the awakened consciousness; it is a truer interpretation of that which God created "in the beginning."

It inevitably follows, of course, that that which is found in Mind is eternal, and is eternally protected by Mind. Health, wholeness, happiness, freedom, bounty, completeness, when found in Mind—and it cannot be found outside of Mind—can never be reversed. In the same way, the false mortal concept of the mortal mind cannot reappear after it has once been destroyed by the knowledge of what is, of what Mind includes. This is why when a belief has once been destroyed by Christian Science, that belief can never return. It is not only proved nonexistent; it is proved never to have been true. Just as the child who has proved that two and two are four will not again try to work out his problems in arithmetic on the false supposition that two and two are five, so the one who has proved that infinite Mind includes within itself all good, and that man, the compound idea of God, inevitably reflects every quality of Mind, will not again attempt to look outside of Mind. This understanding of Mind's completeness is the new heaven and the new earth, wherein "the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind."

[Louis E. Scholl in Chehalis (Wash.) Bee-Nugget]

The Bee-Nugget of recent date reports a critic of Christian Science as saying that it is neither Christian nor scientific. Permit me to say here that whether this is a true statement or not depends not at all upon the opinions of those professional opponents of Christian Science who gain a certain amount of popularity and publicity by sensational attacks on a church that has had a wonderful growth and has brought great blessings to suffering humanity.

Webster defines Christianity as "practical conformity of one's inward and outward life to the spirit of the Christian religion," and all would probably agree that this is a good definition. Christian Scientists are endeavoring to be Christians in this sense, and are striving to be Christians, not merely by profession, but by "demonstration of the Spirit and of power."

If this critic who claims to "do the work of an evangelist" would confine himself to that work and, instead of judging others who are just as sincere as he is in their endeavors to form their own opinions as to whether Christian Science is Christian and scientific, he would probably be doing the cause which he represents a greater service. Jesus left just one test by which his followers were to be judged when he said, "By their fruits ye shall know them." Paul tells us, "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." Unjust criticism of any body of people who are sincerely trying to make the world better has not as a rule borne "the fruit of the Spirit." Mrs. Eddy says on page 106 of Miscellany, "I admonish Christian Scientists either to speak charitably of all mankind or to keep silent, for love fulfils divine law and without this proof of love mental practice were profitless." Leaders of all religious bodies and their followers must learn this lesson before ever the world will be brought to a knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ.

[Hugh S. Hughes, Jr., in Milwaukee (Wis.) Sentinel]

Much publicity in the press has been given the case of a child in New Jersey, who died of diphtheria while under Christian Science treatment. The press makes much of an isolated case which may be lost under Christian Science treatment, while the many deaths under medical care are accepted as a matter of course.

According to statistics of the state health department, in 1918 the fatal cases of diphtheria in Milwaukee under medical treatment were 11.9 per 100 cases. The rate in the state for 1918 of fatalities was 14.1 per 100 cases. From January 1 to date, according to figures obtained from the health department, out of 354 cases in Milwaukee under medical treatment, thirty-two were fatal. In view of such a record, why is such an outcry made against the loss of one case under Christian Science treatment. Is it that the medical profession, with its constantly changing theories and practices, is fearful that it will lose the confidence of the people in its once undisputed assertion that the "allopathic is the only true school of healing"?

If medical treatment were as infallible as its proponents would like to have the public believe, there would be no need of Christian Science healing. Over three-fourths of the people who come to Christian Science for healing have been given up by physicians, and have found health and happiness in Christian Science; and because of the ever increasing number who are depending upon it for their health, and finding it, every effort is made by the allopathic school of medicine to discredit the healing power of Christian Science, and efforts are constantly being made to give the allopathic school of medicine the protection of state and national law in its claim to special privilege as the safeguarder of the public health.

In the so-called epidemic of influenza in 1918, the statistics in Wisconsin show that over six per cent of the cases under medical treatment were fatal, while statistics gathered from forty-five cities in Wisconsin, including Milwaukee, show that under Christian Science treatment only two-tenths of one per cent were fatal.

Need one wonder that with such records, thousands are turning daily to Christian Science for the healing of disease?

A writer in a recent issue attempted under the caption "Psychic Phenomena: Some Studies of Unusual Manifestations," to couple Christian Science with modern psychotherapy and primitive psychotherapy, with the result that he has most conclusively shown, to any one having a least knowledge of Christian Science, that he does not understand the first Principle of the teaching of this new-old Science of Christianity.

Christian Science could never be what its self-appointed critics say it is, and yet be true. Any one who will may prove for himself that Christian Science does make plain the method of how to preach the gospel and heal the sick and sinning on the Christ-basis. Christ is the corner stone of the Christian Science church. It is the only church in Christendom that was founded for the exclusive purpose of commemorating the words and works of the great Master, and of reinstating the Christianity of the primitive church, together with its lost element of healing.

Christian Science healing includes infinitely more than merely to know that "mind rules the body." In Christian Science, God, Mind, is the only ruling and governing power. Christian Science teaches that God is All-in-all, the only presence, and the only power, even as the Bible teaches. Of the Christian Science student Mrs. Eddy states in "Miscellaneous Writings," on page 268: "His medicine is Mind—the omnipotent and ever-present good. His 'help is from the Lord,' who heals body and mind, head and heart; changing the affections, enlightening the misguided senses, and curing alike the sin and the mortal sinner. God's preparations for the sick are potions of His own qualities. His therapeutics are antidotes for the ailments of mortal mind and body."

Christian Scientists understand that God is the only lawmaker; the only lawgiver; that God, being Spirit, His laws must be spiritual, perfect, harmonious. A knowledge of God and His laws gives one absolute supremacy over all discord and inharmony. God being the Physician in Christian Science, the charge of employing suggestion is shown to be entirely erroneous. Christian Science heals organic disorders just as surely as it heals anything else. Thousands of persons living to-day, who formerly suffered from all kinds of organic troubles, pronounced so by the best physicians, will gladly testify to the fact that they were thoroughly and permanently healed through Christian Science.

A very large percentage of the people who turn to Christian Science for help, do so only after they have exhausted every other means for finding relief. The ranks of Christian Scientists have been filled by former members of perhaps every known faith and belief. Not one of these would be capable of accomplishing what they are daily able to accomplish, if Christian Science were anything less than what it has been stated to be—the new-old religion of Jesus the Christ.

In her Communion Message of June 4, 1899 (Miscellany, p. 127), Mrs. Eddy stated: "On comparison, it will be found that Christian Science possesses more of Christ's teachings and example than all other religions since the first century. Comparing our scientific system of metaphysical therapeutics with materia medica, we find that divine metaphysics completely overshadows and overwhelms materia medica, even as Aaron's rod swallowed up the rods of the magicians of Egypt."

[Robert S. Ross in The Knickerbocker Press, Albany, N. Y.]

Far be it from Christian Scientists to be disrespectful of the courts of the land or of the medical profession; nevertheless, owing to the publicity that has been given to the Walker case in Newark, New Jersey, they are prompted in self-defense to speak a few words for public consideration. Like all other exemplary citizens, Christian Scientists aim to obey the laws of the land, not only because good citizenship requires it, but because the teachings of Mrs. Eddy demand it, based, as they are, on Principle. On page 128 of Miscellany, Mrs. Eddy writes, "Christian Scientists abide by the laws of God and the laws of the land; and, following the command of the Master, they go into all the world, preaching the gospel and healing the sick." Nothing could be farther from the truth than the commonly accepted error that Christian Scientists are neglectful regarding so-called contagious diseases. True, they do not fear them, or any other disease; nevertheless, they aim to report them as do others, not only because the law requires it, but because Christian Scientists are uniformly considerate of those who do not possess the confidence and security inspired by Christian Science in times of sickness as well as in health.

It may be that Christian Scientists occasionally err, but this must be at least equally true of those who are not Scientists. We believe, however, that it would be difficult for anybody to find a single bona fide recorded case of willful negligence on the part of a Christian Scientist; which is significant in view of the oft repeated charge that Christian Scientists are incapable of detecting disease. During his term as health commissioner of New York city, the late Dr. Lederle issued a statement to the effect that he had found Christian Scientists more zealous than any other class of citizens to obey the regulations of the sanitary code. This statement was prompted by inquiries as to whether or not Christian Scientists were neglecting to report so-called contagious cases. Even doctors sometimes err in their diagnoses. Was it not the noted Dr. Richard Cabot of Boston who declared publicly that nearly fifty per cent of the cases admitted for hospital treatment, including surgical cases, are wrongly diagnosed?

Furthermore, we respectfully submit the proposition that if the law is to be invoked in these isolated cases of failure under Christian Science treatment, it should also be invoked in cases of failure under medical treatment, the daily number of which the reader may estimate somewhat by consulting the newspaper obituary columns. Death is as unlawful under one method of treatment as under another, unless, indeed there be a regular way in which to die. A metropolitan evening newspaper, in an editorial comment upon the Walker case, goes to the extreme of making the following statement: "In diphtheria, especially, proper medical treatment has given an almost unquestionable assurance of recovery, while neglect has been almost a promise of death." A complete answer to this is found in the vital statistics as to diphtheria, as compiled by the health department of this city. It is safe to assume that in nearly all of these cases "proper medical treatment" was administered. Inasmuch as the Christian Science movement is made up to a large extent of those who have been restored to health, happiness, and usefulness when other means have failed them, we are confident that the public will not permit its vision to be beclouded by the verdict in the Newark case.

Cain and Abel

When the skeptic is desirous of justifying his skepticism, he turns quite commonly to the Old Testament, and from its pages he has no difficulty in producing some story so extremely unethical as, in his opinion, to justify all the animadversion he may be capable of. Of course if the skeptic is a scholar, he is much more careful than if he belongs to the family of those who still believe in verbal inspiration, even to the extent of "that blessed word Mesopotamia." The critic knows that you cannot judge an Eastern book, written centuries before the Christian era, by the standard of Christian apologetics of to-day. He knows that the Eastern writer indulged in almost breathless imagery, with the result that one metaphor tripped over the heels of another metaphor until to the consciousness of a modern Westerner an approximation had been made to the standard of Sir Boyle Roche. The writer of Isaiah, for instance, thought nothing of importing three contradictory metaphors into a single sentence, nor did it ever occur to the prophet Joel that if he talked of the moon being turned into blood, anybody would imagine that he was referring to anything but an eclipse. Therefore when the skeptic aims all his heaviest artillery at the story of Cain and Abel, and explains how God was only satisfied with the blood of a lamb, when He might have been appeased with the fruit of the earth, he is leaving out of sight one or two interesting facts. First of all, the Old Testament represents the highest religious thought of the period in which it was written, but not the highest religious thought man was capable of attaining to. There is much in the story of Jehovah which is of the earth earthy, but compared with the story of the deities of Egypt and Babylon, of Syria and of Assyria, it is exactly the advance which might have been expected from the writers of a people which had at least turned from polytheism to monotheism.

Then, again, it has to be remembered that the writers of these books did not mean all they said to be taken absolutely literally. They took the history of a nation, and used it as a means of driving home certain moral lessons. Thus it might be true that, judged by the standard of the day, Abel's sacrifice showed a greater love of Principle than that of Cain, inasmuch as it offered what was more valuable to the giver. Abraham, indeed, went even further than Abel, in this respect, when he proposed to offer the greatest of his possessions, Isaac, as a sacrifice. But the writer of the Pentateuch, intent upon turning the thoughts of men from the hideous Moloch worship of their day toward the sacrifice rather of animals, drove home his lesson by the story of the ram caught by its horns in the thicket, which was to be substituted for the boy. In just the same way, the Pentateuch writer uses the story of Cain and Abel, not merely to prove the willingness of Abel, acting in accordance with the ideals of his time, to sacrifice more for Principle than Cain, but, as a metaphor, to show, as Mrs. Eddy points out, on page 541 of Science and Health, that it is the spiritual lesson to be drawn from the story, and not the mere material facts of the story, which constitutes the value of the record. "Had God," she asks, "more respect for the homage bestowed through a gentle animal than for the worship expressed by Cain's fruit?" And she answers, "No; but the lamb was a more spiritual type of even the human concept of Love than the herbs of the ground could be."

What, then, the writer was endeavoring to show was, surely, that the sacrifices which the world makes to Principle have to be mental sacrifices. The fruits of the earth which Cain offered were typical of his own inveterate materiality; the firstling of the flock which Abel presented typified the escape from dense materiality toward a concept of Principle as Mind. In other words, whilst Cain remained an unmoved materialist, Abel was already awakening to some conception of idealism. Anybody who follows the gradual evolution of the spiritual idea throughout the Old Testament will have little difficulty in understanding this. If the story of Cain and Abel is the first theoretical claim in the Old Testament of man's waking out of the slumber of materiality into the perception of idealism, then the words of Isaiah offer the first direct historical command to break practically with the law that Moses imposed upon the people, in the day of their dense materiality, and to put aside the physical sacrifices demanded in that law, in favor of sacrifices more strictly idealistic. The writer of the Pentateuch had dwelt on the materialistic aspect of Cain's sacrifice and on the more idealistic offering of Abel. The giver of the law had insisted on the necessity for both offerings in the Levitical document. It remained for Isaiah to break away from the law in his appeal to the people, in the famous exhortation, "To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto me? saith the Lord: I am full of the burnt offerings of rams, and the fat of fed beasts; and I delight not in the blood of bullocks, or of lambs, or of he goats," and then to demand that the idealism expressed in Abel's offering should be extended into an even greater expression of spiritual understanding, "Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil; learn to do well; seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow."

From the book of Isaiah to the gospels is a step forward in spiritual understanding,—a step contained in the demonstration of the virgin birth, and of the demand for the gospel of purity made by the Virgin's son. "Greater love hath no man than this," Christ Jesus declared, "that a man lay down his life for his friends." Now the student of the Bible knows perfectly well that the word translated life in the Greek Testament is soul, and that by the word soul, the Jew understood nothing more nor less than animate matter. Therefore the demand of Christ Jesus was that men should recognize that there was nothing but God, and that God was Mind, and should proceed not merely to pray at the street corners in proof of the new revelation, but to demonstrate their understanding of it in word and deed. Greater love no man could have than that he should lay aside his own sensuality for the sake of humanity, because it was only by laying it aside that he could demonstrate that understanding of God as Mind, which Abel had so faintly perceived, and which Isaiah had exhorted the people of a later generation to recognize. "A new commandment I give unto you," Jesus, again, declared, "That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another." How had Jesus shown his love for his disciples? It had been in burning out of them, as it were, every atom of belief in matter and of a life apart from God. He had led his flock to lie down in green pastures, not by teaching them ease in the senses, but by showing them that the senses were incapable of giving them ease, and that it was utterly impossible for them to enter into heaven until they had cast aside their materiality, even if the separation took place with all the agony of the flesh. "I indeed baptize you with water," the Baptist had told his disciples; "but one mightier than I cometh, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose: he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire." This baptism of fire was the repudiation of all that was material, of the concept of Cain, in the understanding that nothing exists but divine Mind and its harmonious manifestation, the dawning concept of Abel.

Thus from Genesis to Revelation may be read the evolution of the spiritual idea, in the history of man, first waking to the dim perception of God as Mind, then gradually realizing, and slowly demonstrating, the omniscience, omnipotence, and omnipresence of this Mind, God. What the writer of the Pentateuch saw in a glass very darkly, the disciples of Jesus the Christ were to see face to face. But the materiality of the first century made it impossible for the world to grasp the Science of Christianity, even though the writers of the gospels and the epistles drew their attention to it. Centuries had to pass before law could be made plain to the world, not in the demands of a priestcraft upon a people, but as the activity of divine Mind. "Cain," Mrs. Eddy writes, on page 540 of Science and Health, "is the type of mortal and material man, conceived in sin and 'shapen in iniquity;' he is not the type of Truth and Love. Material in origin and sense, he brings a material offering to God. Abel takes his offering from the firstlings of the flock. A lamb is a more animate form of existence, and more nearly resembles a mind-offering than does Cain's fruit."

The Health of Children

THE entire influence of Christian Science in any community is constructive. When a student of Christian Science opposes the attempts of various well-meaning people to extend the medical examination of school children, that one does so knowing the thorough effectiveness of spiritual Principle. The whole desire of such a one is to remain free to use this Principle, which is sure in its operation for children as well as for adults. Instead of neglecting in any way the health of children, such a parent is understanding what true health is and scientifically demonstrating it. Those who wish to depend wholly upon this understanding are entitled to be free from the dominating imposition of medical theories upon themselves or their children whether in connection with the schools or otherwise. The great mass of people, moreover, who as yet may seem indifferent to either medical methods or those of Christian Science, should be free to choose for themselves, without any restrictions requiring or even suggesting general medical conformity. It is no more logical to compel medical examinations with all the advice that accompanies them than it would be to enforce Christian Science treatment on all the people. The student of Christian Science has the right to continue unhampered the proving of the operation of divine Principle as preserving the health of men, women, and children, and to bring his method to the attention of all those who may interest themselves in it.

The correct reasoning of Christian Science on the whole subject needs constantly to be reiterated. An enormous amount of propaganda in favor of medical supervision of all children is being circulated in books, magazines, and newspapers. Textbooks of all sorts, including those merely intended to teach foreigners the English language, have their chapters urging the adoption of numerous medical theories. The use of attractive phrases, or shibboleths, in a widespread campaign of advertising is being advocated in the hope that thus it may be insistently suggested to the multitudes that they should willingly submit to and aid in the general program for medical domination. Those responsible for this propaganda have seemed, in many cases, utterly to ignore the fact that a large part of the public does not approve of the methods of serotherapy. This use of suggestion to influence people generally can rightly be counteracted only by activity in accord with divine Principle. To depend on Principle is to know how to replace suggestion with truly intelligent reasoning. Each one must, moreover, prove his faith by his works.

Christian Science is indeed effective for the proper protection of the health of the children, just as it is in every other phase of experience. "Health is," as Mrs. Eddy says in "Rudimental Divine Science" (p. 11), "the absolute consciousness of harmony." Nothing less than that could possibly be real health for either child or adult. Mrs. Eddy's whole sentence is, "Health is the consciousness of the unreality of pain and disease; or, rather, the absolute consciousness of harmony and of nothing else." The true consciousness of vigor is, of course, entirely spiritual. A parent who turns unreservedly to this one consciousness and understands the spiritual activity which the divine consciousness eternally knows and which constitutes health finds thus and proves the actual health of the true child as divine intelligence manifest. In other words, the one humanly called a parent must know that divine intelligence governs child perfectly and insures the harmonious activity which is health. The child should be naturally encouraged to reason for itself that the divine Mind takes complete care of its idea, which is the reality of child. In this way the health of the child is scientifically protected from any suggestions of an opposite.

This method of protection in Christian Science can be only briefly stated in a short article. The entirety of the infinite Principle which sustains health, Mrs. Eddy has explained throughout her works. The work of Christian Science is a constant ministry, a boundless proving that the divine Mind ministers all good to the true idea or child of Mind. That this ministry is effective the many throughout the world have already demonstrated to their continuously unfolding satisfaction. As Mrs. Eddy says in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 5), "Mothers should be able to produce perfect health and perfect morals in their children—and ministers, to heal the sick—by studying this scientific method of practising Christianity." Through the study of Christian Science innumerable people are now thus able to insure health by reliance on infinite Mind.

The true child which the divine Mind knows is not limited in any way. Too often parents, teachers, and those who have advocated compulsory medical methods have looked upon children as unable really to think for themselves. What they one and all need to know instead is that the expression of divine intelligence is all there is to the true child, and that this divine idea is ever consciously depending on Principle for orderly vigor. The very understanding of this is sure to aid the one called a child as no material means could aid. In all simplicity the child is entitled to be conscious that strength and happiness of every sort come here and now from the divine Mind. Christian Science is successful in the case of a child, as in any other case, because it demonstrates the true idea in place of any false sense of things. Thus the really constructive work that is in accord with Principle replaces supposed limitations with infinite activity in perfect order. Both parents and children, therefore, should always be entirely free to practice Christian Science in all circumstances.

Among the Churches

Current Notes

FOND DU LAC, WIS.—First Church of Christ, Scientist, has purchased the Trinity church building on Portland Street and will occupy it as a place of worship. First Church of Christ, Scientist, has been occupying quarters at 142 South Main Street, but the membership has increased to such an extent that it was necessary to seek a new location. It is the aim of the church ultimately to build a modern home.—Fond du Lac Reporter.

The Lectures

IRONWOOD, MICH. (Society).—Lecturer introduced by Mrs. Marion Larson, who said in part:—

Christian Science focuses the attention and thought on what all Christians desire to grasp,—the things of Spirit, God. History shows us that Christ Jesus came to this world at a time of great need. Mankind's faith in God was wavering, and thought had become so self-seeking and material that men were fast falling away from God. Jesus' wonderful proofs in healing sin, sickness, and death roused mankind from their dreams, and gave them the great incentive to seek and know the spiritual life. Surely, there is great need to-day for seeking and knowing spiritual life, and Christian Science as discovered and taught by Mary Baker Eddy has been given to the world, showing each one who seeks it the way to this life. It teaches of love not hate; it holds out a hand to help up, not strike down; it seeks to heal, not cause suffering; it brings the sunshine of happiness into the heart and not the darkness of despair. Those who are striving to live faithfully the teachings of Christian Science are proving these facts, and the results are health, freedom, and happiness.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND. (joint lecture).—Lecturer introduced by W. Curtis Day, who said in part:—

Throughout the centuries perhaps no phase of human experience has more extensively engaged the thought of mankind than that of disease, along with the unavailing search for material means of escape from the burden of its ills and woes. Mankind says, in the words of Jeremiah, "Peace, peace; when there is no peace," notwithstanding that nearly twenty centuries ago there came upon the earth one who had been heralded "The Prince of Peace," and this master Christian healed all manner of disease, solely through his understanding of Spirit. His loving invitation was, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," and he demonstrated, to use the words of Paul, that "the kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." But because it was not fully comprehended, this spiritual reign of righteousness, with its attendant peace and joy, was not generally established, and after a few centuries was largely put in the background by the powers of materialism and unrighteousness. Only occasionally in the intervening centuries was there one with vision sufficiently spiritual to pierce the gloom of materialism and catch glimpses of the full mission of the Christ, Truth.

Finally, however, a little more than a half century ago when Christendom was praying for a fuller understanding of the teachings of the Master, there came an answer to this prayer through the purity of thought and spiritual discernment of a New England woman, Mary Baker Eddy. Having suffered in considerable degree the discords and physical discomforts incident to human experience, having come even within the "valley of the shadow of death," she turned to God with absolute reliance and was healed of the condition, the result of an accident, that was about to end her earthly career. With an earnest longing to gain an understanding of the divine Principle of all healing, in the subsequent years of diligent study and meditation there was unfolded to her the Science of Christianity, which she designated Christian Science.

Through her tireless and devoted labors for the relief of burdened humanity, Mrs. Eddy has vouchsafed to all mankind that never again will this healing and regenerating truth be lost sight of, nor the full measure of its availability and usefulness be in any way abridged.

In her matchless spiritual interpretation of the Bible, embodied in the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," she has indeed placed within the reach of all the key to that vast storehouse of good.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by William R. Bull, who said in part:—

Christian Science is wholly spiritual and teaches a man how to bring into his earthly experiences the blessings of Spirit, the "evidence of things not seen." It asks nothing more than to be judged by its demonstrations. The earnest purpose of Christian Science lecturers is to present some elemental truths of this spiritual subject.

AMSTERDAM, HOLLAND (Society).—Lecturer introduced by P. A. Rehbock, who said in part:—

In these difficult times in which evil and depravity everywhere seem coming to the surface, it is a gratifying token that on the other hand a distinctly noticeable desire for good can be observed. Your presence here to-night to listen to a lecture on Christian Science is one of the proofs of this. Indeed, all the evil and the falling to the ground of human desires and material props force us to seek after those things which are unchangeable and eternal.

Jesus said: "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," and the Bible tells us how this truth made free not only from sin but also from all forms of evil, disease included. And if this truth was true then and made free then, it is true now and can also make free now. And that this is so, is the glad message that Christian Science makes known to the people of this age.

Mary Baker Eddy, an American gentlewoman, experienced in 1866 the healing power of Truth in her own case, and could demonstrate it also for others. She laid down this discovery and explained this law in the textbook of Christian Science, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures."

GLOVERSVILLE, N. Y. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Edward C. Bowman, who said in part:—

The Bible is acknowledged to be the world's greatest book, and "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy has unquestionably made plain the Scriptures in their spiritual import, and brought healing and regeneration to many thousands, who gladly testify to the power of God's truth as demonstrated in Christian Science.

It is the purpose of the lecture on Christian Science this evening to bring to you a message of Life, Truth, and Love, and present the fundamental teachings of the religion Christ Jesus exemplified while on earth,—a religion which has no limitations, and imposes no man-made doctrines, but in its simplicity and efficacy in meeting every human need, satisfies the longing to know God. That Christian Science heals disease and overcomes sin has been proved conclusively in thousands of cases, and Christian Scientists to-day rejoice in the knowledge of this fact, established through the love, patience, and sacrificial effort of Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science. A great blessing has been conferred upon the world by her through the spiritual interpretation of the Bible, which to many was a closed book. Doubts as to the mission of Jesus, who healed the sick and cast out evil, commanding his disciples to do likewise, have been cleared away and the world is awake to the reality that divine healing is possible to-day.—Gloversville Herald.

ASPEN, COLO. (First Church).—Lecturer introduced by Chas. Dailey, Sr., who said in part:—

Mankind has long been in bondage to the material senses, a slave to the belief that there is life in matter; that the five physical senses testify to the truth when they affirm that the body is discordant, sick, and diseased. Mrs. Eddy reversed this testimony when she wrote: "There is no life, truth, intelligence, nor substance in matter. All is infinite Mind and its infinite manifestation, for God is All-in-all" (Science and Health, p. 468). She set at naught physical science, which had been seeking to find the cause of all action and force in matter, and established the eternal truth, through demonstration, that God is the only cause, the only Life, Truth, and intelligence. Christian Scientists are convinced that they are learning the truth about the nature of God, and therefore about the character of His creation; in proof of which they are enjoying liberation and freedom from the troubles that flesh and human consciousness are heir to.

EMMETT, IDAHO (Society).—Lecturer introduced by Miss Dora E. Merrill, who said in part:—

In all ages and in all climes, men have ever sought some higher being, some great creative force to worship, one who in some sense answered the aspiration of the groping thought. Driven by this compelling force Abraham and his kin, with their flocks and herds, came out from Ur of the Chaldees to seek a place where they might worship the one only God, the great Jehovah. From this time prophets and seers of the tribe of Israel caught glimpses of the divine Principle and, as they walked with God, healed the sick and suffering and rebuked sin.

In the fullness of time, Christ, the active expression of the divine Mind, incarnate in the man Jesus, came with the full message of truth, the great Way-shower for us all. He taught the reality of things spiritual, the unreality of things material, of sin, sickness, and death.

Jesus of Nazareth said to the Jews who believed on him, "If ye continue in my word . . : ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free,"—the truth about God, the infinite Father, and man His spiritual child, made in His image and likeness. The understanding of this truth makes us free from all that is unlike God, from sin, disease, and death. For three centuries after the crucifixion, the disciples went out as commanded, healing the sick and casting out sin, until the belief in the reality of matter overshadowed the clear sense of the divine truth and the understanding was lost. In our own day an inspired gentlewoman of New England, lying at the point of death, grasped again the fundamentals of the Christ-healing, and rose healed to spend her life in consecrated study,—Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science.

LAUSANNE, SWITZERLAND (Society).—The words of the introduction were in part as follows:—

To correct errors and false concepts of Christian Science, a lecture on the subject is being given to those who are interested and who desire correct information.

In the Preface of her book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy writes: "Truth, independent of doctrines and time-honored systems, knocks at the portal of humanity. Contentment with the past and the cold conventionality of materialism are crumbling away. Ignorance of God is no longer the stepping-stone to faith. The only guarantee of obedience is a right apprehension of Him whom to know aright is Life eternal."

To-day more than ever in history, mankind is seeking an answer to this important question which Pilate asked, "What is truth?" The world is weary of theoretical religions and can no longer accept the mysterious and unknown God so far removed from our daily experiences. Mankind sighs and seeks for that divine Love which will meet every human need, which will heal the world of its struggles, its hatred, and its envy. This is the only solution to the tragic problems of our day. And it is just this message of Love which Christian Science brings to the world.

You have come here to hear a lecture on Christian Science by a member of the Board of Lectureship of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston. In answer to the question, "How would you define Christian Science?" Mrs. Eddy says in her book "Rudimental Divine Science" (p. 1), "As the law of God, the law of good, interpreting and demonstrating the divine Principle and rule of universal harmony."

Christian Science is a practical and demonstrable religion teaching us how to think, act, and live rightly, and how to serve one God. It reveals the living Christ forever calling to a world in despair: "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." "Lo, I am with you alway even unto the end of the world."

CAMBRIDGE, MASS. (Society, Harvard University).—Lecturer introduced by Frederick W. Nixon, who said in part:—

To the university student, no less than to the man in the street, the religion of Christian Science is more than a matter of going to church on Sunday. Most of those who come to college as Christian Scientists, have already demonstrated in their homes and in their school work and in their play that Christian Science is a practical religion. And those who go out of the university as Christian Scientists, go out better men and women, clearer thinkers, stronger to cope with the problems of the day.

Testimonies of Healing

In adopting Christian Science one is bringing into his life a science, the practical part of which appeals directly to the man in the street as well as to the woman in the home, for it is most certainly applicable to problems, one and all. As surely as mathematics will bring out a correct result from a correctly stated mathematical problem, so surely will the Science of right thinking bring out a correct result in our daily lives; and where do we need it more than in our daily trials and troubles, to say nothing of danger? The need seems to be greatest when we are beset by some immediate physical danger,—not that our need is really greater, but our fear is; in fact it is the proportion of fear in the case that seems to make the danger greater and immediate help more necessary, and the arms of divine Love never seem nearer than when we require the assurance most. Given the fact that we do our work to the best of our ability when the surroundings are what one might term peaceful, then our need will be met when we land in for times of war.

During five years of active warfare it was finally brought home to me that I was able, not only to do my own job, but do it to the extent that others came and definitely asked what it was that I had got that enabled me to have such confidence and to bring things off which seemed almost humanly impossible. I have had captains of other destroyers come down into my cabin and ask the same thing and I have been able to say that it was the understanding of Christian Science that gave me both the confidence and ability as well as the protection. Of course when all is said and done it is protection that we want, and we certainly get it to an almost extraordinary degree, and I have not been the least surprised at the amazement shown by others on occasions of the following kind. I was in command of a destroyer in the Dover patrol one very dark night, when we suddenly found ourselves alongside an enemy mine-laying submarine, and after dealing with it continued our patrol, one point of which was the well-known Folkestone Gate, which was the point of departure for the many troopships crossing daily to Calais. This "Gate" was formed by a lightship which showed the only light for many miles round and formed a very convenient point to verify our position and turn back again on our patrol. Just as daylight broke we found ourselves again at this point, where we had turned so many times during the dark hours and discovered that our opponent of the previous night had laid a nice little nest of mines in readiness for the troopships. Even with daylight to help us we had the greatest difficulty in avoiding mines which we had turned amongst many times during the night. As Christian Scientists we are satisfied only with results (or demonstrations) and this was a practical demonstration of the protection afforded to ourselves and the troopships.

On another occasion we had just finished our day's work of escorting transports across channel when a thick fog set in. We were then on the English side and had to make our way back to Dunkirk. To find and enter the narrow Roads of Dunkirk, the entrance of which was situated between sandbanks on one side and a very active mine field on the other, which had been successful in blowing up several of our own destroyers, seemed about the last thing any one would undertake from choice. However, with the knowledge that God is both intelligence and protection, I made a signal to my companion destroyer to the effect that he might follow me if he wished. We shot off for the French coast at twenty knots, the other destroyer following, having elected to rely upon us for guidance. At the entrance to the Roads there is a similar buoy to one marking the center of the mine field, only the latter was painted red; at the time I figured out that we should see the buoy marking the entrance, we found ourselves, instead, right alongside the red painted buoy, or in other words we were exactly in the center of the mine field. Right there when our human need was greatest, divine Love was nearest, to the extent that I was able to clear away almost every sense of fear and so shape a course through the danger and bring my own ship and my companion safely into harbor. These are the blessings that the understanding of Christian Science brings, the conscious and unconscious protection of divine Love, and one is able to put into practice the golden promises of the ninety-first psalm, also to realize the truth of what Mrs. Eddy says on page 494 of Science and Health, "Divine Love always has met and always will meet every human need."

With a joyful heart and with deepest thanks to God I wish to give my testimony of the many blessings and wonderful healing which I have had through the knowledge of the teachings of Christian Science. About eight years ago I heard of this beautiful teaching for the first time. It would take up too much space were I to tell of all the blessings received since then. I wish, however, to relate a healing received lately and in doing so hope to encourage others to put implicit faith in the almighty God, for He is certainly always willing and ready to meet our every need and help us in all our infirmities.

In October, 1918, I was called to a neighbor's home where all the members of the family, nine in all, were lying in bed with the grippe. For ten days I helped nurse these people, and helped with the household duties of a large farm. I worked days and kept watch the whole night through without experiencing the slightest fatigue, for I knew that God works in me "both to will and to do." In the meantime, however, my dear mother, seventy-three years of age, became ill, so that I was obliged to remain at home. During the following night I, too, was stricken with a heavy fever, an infection of the throat, and inflammation of the eyes. I trusted in the all-power of God, and in spite of severe chills arose in the morning and attended to the necessary household duties. These troubles were accompanied by severe catarrh and bronchitis. I was able to overcome all these errors without applying a single material remedy, only by trusting in divine help, the great Physician, who is omnipresent. In a very short time I had completely recovered and felt well and refreshed. My dear mother also completely recovered in a short time.

How grateful we are to the all-loving, divine Father for this truth which overcomes all ills! We also, in love and gratitude, thank our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy. It is our greatest desire to learn more and more of this beautiful teaching and to apply it in our daily life, and to help others as we have been helped.—(Mrs.) Rosa Thorimbert-Dick, Rudswil-Ersigen, Switzerland.

It is with deep gratitude that I give this testimony to the healing and regenerating power of Christian Science. Until about three and one half years ago I was without any religion or belief in God, and up to that time never felt any desire for spiritual things. I thought that all kinds of religion were more or less superstitious and due to fear of punishment hereafter, and as I thought I had tried all my life to live somewhat after the teachings of the Golden Rule,

I need not have any fear of future punishment. Such was my blindness. And yet I was a sufferer all my life from all sorts of physical ailments, but it was not for physical healing that I turned to Christian Science. The time came when I needed help other than physical or material, and as I had not known God, did not know how to turn to Him. I was brought up in the Jewish religion, but turned from that as it did not seem to meet my need. I went to other churches, but could find no satisfaction in them, and at last was led by divine guidance to the Christian Science church one Sunday morning. The lesson was "Love," and every word I heard that morning entered my consciousness and has never left me. I was instantly healed of all that was troubling me, and came out of that church a new woman. After that some loving neighbors lent me a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, and the reading of that wonderful book healed me of stomach trouble of many years' standing, which was supposed to have been inherited. Also at that time a difficult financial problem was solved. Since then I have had many beautiful healings in Christian Science, for which I am grateful; but I am most grateful for the overcoming and destruction of false beliefs, such as limitation, worry, envy, feelings of injustice and resentment, and for the daily blessings that came to me through the overcoming.

I am also grateful for the kind and patient work of the practitioners through whose work I have been helped over so many rough places. I am grateful for the literature, as many problems have been solved by the reading of it. Most of all I am grateful to our dear Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, for giving to us this wonderful, true religion, through the study of which we may find and know God, infinite good.

In August, in 1909, I had almost lost the use of my right hand and arm from rheumatism. Our family physician kindly told me there was no need to take medicine as it would not cure me, but to go to the sanitarium again. I had decided I would never go there again, so Christian Science found me surrounded by dark clouds. A dear friend called a practitioner for me; she lovingly responded and in a few weeks I was healed. I have not taken medicine since. Christian Science has comforted me in sorrow; the Bible and Science and Health have been my daily companions. I am thankful for all I have received, for the spiritual uplift and for the privilege of membership in The Mother Church. As Mrs. Eddy states in Science and Health (p. 264), "Spiritual living and blessedness are the only evidences by which we can recognize true existence and feel the unspeakable peace which comes from an all-absorbing spiritual love."

It is with love in my heart and a desire to heal and bless that I give this testimony. I was healed of ulceration of the stomach, nervous debility, constipation, and weak eyes, after having five weeks' treatment in Christian Science. These conditions had existed for six years, keeping me in a state of invalidism so serious that I could walk only a couple of blocks occasionally, and then again for months at a time would be confined to my bed; also it was necessary for me to be carried upstairs. During all this time I was on various diets, also had two operations, the last one being very serious. After this operation the surgeon told my mother that it would be two years before I would even commence to feel well. Three months after this operation I was in a worse condition than ever, so when a friend spoke to me of Christian Science, we agreed to try it, although I understood nothing about it. Then in five short weeks I was well, ate anything, did anything, and experienced the most wonderful joy at the freedom from worry and dread of suffering. Since then I have continued in good health and have not resorted to medical treatment these past three years and six months.

Previous to my healing I had not attended church since childhood days and was greatly opposed to any religious theory, but now that I truly understand what God is, that feeling has vanished. Gradually the study of the Bible and the Christian Science textbook is helping me in the overcoming of fear, worry, impatience, and the deadliest of all sins, selfishness.

Besides my own healing, I have seen my mother healed of constipation of seventeen years' standing; my little niece also was cured of dysentery in one treatment. How glad I am that this way is given me for showing my gratitude to God and to Mary Baker Eddy.

I have always been helped so much through reading the testimonies in the Sentinel and Journal that I would like to tell of some of the benefits I have received through Christian Science. I did not come into Christian Science for physical healing, but because my religion did not satisfy me. Still I got the physical healing almost at once—as soon, in fact, as I began to apply what I had gleaned from reading "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy. At the time Christian Science was first brought to my notice by a friend, I was suffering from overwork, was painfully thin and colorless, and extremely irritable and difficult to live with. My mother urged me to have treatment, but I declared I felt quite well, so then she proposed I should try and put in practice as much as I knew. The same friend who had told us of Science gave me some references from Science and Health that she thought would help me and I studied our textbook rather more earnestly, with the desire for healing—and the healing came. In a fortnight I looked very different and never since that time have I gone back to that condition. That was, I think, early in 1914. In June, 1916, I was working as a V. A. D. in a hospital in France in the midst of materia medica thought where the belief of poison was very strong. I developed a septic toe, and did not seem able to overcome it myself,—although I was able to do all I had to do in my daily work, which entailed a great amount of standing about. The appearance, however, grew worse daily and my mother wrote offering to arrange for absent treatment for me, an offer which I gratefully accepted. I wrote to her on a Thursday and on Sunday night when I went to bed I noticed the toe was becoming normal. On Monday morning the healing was perfect and has remained so ever since. This healing absolutely proved to me that "Science can heal the sick, who are absent from their healers, as well as those present, since space is no obstacle to Mind" (Science and Health, p. 179). I heard later that the practitioner, who was unknown to me at the time, had given me one treatment on the Sunday afternoon and the healing was practically instantaneous. My third physical healing was from the effects of an accident. I was riding a borrowed bicycle along a country road, when going at rather a sharp pace down a hill and rounding a corner at the bottom I found the road was blocked by two nursemaids with perambulators and some small children running alongside. Although I rang my bell vigorously they did not hear, so I put on the brake. It happened to be a very powerful one and I shot over the handlebars and landed on my face in the road, which was covered more or less with small stones. My face was very much disfigured, but the sense of shock disappeared immediately as I declared the "scientific statement of being," which is found on page 468 of Science and Health. I repeated the first sentence over and over again almost unconsciously, until my thought cleared, and I realized that matter had no intelligence to say it was hurt. I finished my ride and went back to the house where we were staying, and on opening my Science and Health I opened it at page 424, where is written, "Accidents are unknown to God, or immortal Mind, and we must leave the mortal basis of belief and unite with the one Mind, in order to change the notion of chance to the proper sense of God's unerring direction and thus bring out harmony." Although the accident still seemed rather real to me, I continued to know that I was God's reflection and therefore could only reflect good, and in three days there was hardly a trace left of the injury. I am extremely grateful for these physical healings and for the confidence one has that, whatever claim may arise, God is ever present and is "a very present help in trouble." But I am more grateful for the light that Mrs. Eddy, through Science and Health, has shed on the Bible, whereby all its glorious promises are shown to be applicable to us all here and now, and for the changed outlook it has given me on life. The more I study this wonderful Science of Christianity the more grateful I feel to Mrs. Eddy for giving this truth to humanity after she had discovered it for herself. I am also most grateful to all the earnest workers in the field who have helped me many a time in various ways, often in the early days, by their example and steadfastness when I was assailed with doubts. I am also very grateful for the Journal and Sentinel—the articles in which have often helped me on my way. The daily reading of the Monitor is the greatest joy and blessing to me; in fact, the periodicals at the present time seem to be more beautiful and precious to me than ever before, and to help me more than ever.

Having been greatly helped and comforted many times by reading the testimonies of others, I would like to help some one by telling a little of what Christian Science has done for me. It has lifted me out of sickness and ignorance of the truth about God and man. While I had been an active worker and teacher in a denominational church, I did not understand God to be an ever present help and deliverance from all error here and now. I was subject to biliousness and internal weakness; life was a drag; now I know that God is my strength and that He will make my way perfect. I have no fear, no anxious care, knowing that "thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." I am never lonely because I can always have the Bible and Science and Health to read, which means more to me than all else. I am grateful to our dear Leader and for the help of practitioners. My desire is to attain to such an understanding that I may do the work Christ Jesus bade us do.

(Mrs.) Linnie Smith, Zanesville, Ohio.

In view of the many beautiful demonstrations that have come to me in the past nineteen years, I feel that I have been negligent and perhaps disobedient in not testifying to them before.

A few months after I commenced the study of Christian Science in earnest, I was taken with the grippe. The case became so severe that I saw something had to be done immediately, so I took my books, the Bible, and "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and sat for a couple of hours trying to realize the truth of what I was reading, namely, that man made in the image and likeness of God could never be separated from God and therefore could not be sick; that sickness was a false claim, a mistake that must needs be corrected; that man is the idea of God, and God's idea is not sickly. After thinking along these lines for some time I went to bed without any sense of fear as to the result of leaving the case with God. About two o'clock I awoke in a state of perspiration, and the next morning went to business as usual. In a day or two I was as well as ever. Let me say here that the desire for smoking was met at the same time. This habit I had no intention of giving up, but it gave me up. This occurred eighteen years ago and I have never had the least desire to smoke since.

A severe case of eczema was the next error to be overcome and it was several weeks before I could persuade myself to do without lotions, but I am thankful to say it was finally met. Among other errors that have been overcome are severe headaches, pleurisy, ptomaine poisoning, fallen arches, a tendency to take cold easily, and numerous other minor ailments, some through my own understanding, and others with the aid of a practitioner. I also wish to express my gratitude for the privilege I have had of being usher, librarian, and Reader, also for the ability to help others in getting started in the right path. I am also grateful for class instruction and for the periodicals.

Many healings and blessings have come to me in the past three years through the study of Christian Science. From childhood I was troubled with hernia, and for many years wore a truss; after reading the textbook about five months I laid aside the truss, entirely free from the trouble. A bowel trouble of fifteen years' standing was quickly met. I have taken no medicine from the time I started reading Science and Health. I also laid aside glasses the doctor said I would always have to wear, and am now using my eyes more than ever before. The smoking habit was also overcome in a very short time; without any effort on my part the desire for tobacco left me. There are many other healings for which I am truly grateful. Knowing the truth about God and man helps and sustains me in my daily work. I am grateful to Mrs. Eddy for having revealed to us this wonderful truth, and for all the Christian Science literature, which is teaching us the Science of right living.

Being heartily grateful for what Christian Science has done for me and with an earnest desire to be helpful to others, I send my testimony. It has been more than four years since Truth cast out the physical errors, which were a very critical nervous disorder and constipation. I am very happy in testifying that the healings were instantaneous. No wonder that hearts overflow with gratitude to Mrs. Eddy for making plain the path that leads to Life and health and Love. With the psalmist I exclaim, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits: who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases."

I feel I should send my testimony to express my gratitude for all that Christian Science has done for me and mine the past six years. I came into Science for healing, knowing the doctor could do nothing more for me. Although I did not seem to get much help at first, I bought a copy of Science and Health and began to read. A great many times it was laid aside, but I always went back to it.

My first healing was of constipation for myself and three-months-old boy. Then the belief of severe headaches was overcome, and nervousness to some extent. When my second boy was born, although I had lost faith in medicine, I decided I had better have a doctor and trained nurse. I seemed to become unconscious on the seventh day and remained so for ten days. The doctor did not understand it, so we discharged him and the nurse and called in a practitioner and Christian Science nurse. It was some time before I was able to read or remember. After a few treatments I was able to read one line, then two, and so on until I could read my Bible and Science and Health quite well. It was a long time, however, before I could read anything else, and I realized it was because I needed to read these books so much. A great many thought I had lost my mind and I thought so too, until I attended a Christian Science lecture and the lecturer gave me much food for thought, so that I realized I was really just then gaining my right mind, that mind "which was also in Christ Jesus." One day my husband met the doctor on the street car and he said it was a higher power than his that saved me. Although it was quite a severe lesson, I am grateful for it and have been trying hard since to learn more of this beautiful truth.

About sixteen months later my third boy was born and I had only Christian Science help. While not doing my own work till the ninth day, I was only confined to my bed for a short time and have been healthier and better ever since. My baby is now over two years old and we have relied on Christian Science ever since. We fully realize God is an ever present help at all times. With the help of loving practitioners we have overcome the seeming sense of lack, whooping cough, measles, colds, burns, toothache, influenza, and many other things; my oldest boy was healed of a growth on his neck believed by some to be tubercular.

Of course I am very grateful for each of these healings, but I am more grateful for the spiritual understanding I am gaining each day through the study and application of Christian Science. Words cannot express my deep gratitude to God and to Mrs. Eddy for giving us this truth and for the periodicals. I can hardly wait for each to come in its turn, for I always get so much help from them.

(Mrs.) C. BELLE CAPPS, Stockton, Calif.

Five years ago I was compelled to undergo a severe surgical operation. A year afterwards there began to be complications, which surgeons claimed would necessitate another operation. I decided I would not undergo another. About this time a member of my family was given up by physicians. I borrowed a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, thinking if this relative would read it healing might result. I had been a medical nurse for some years, but I had seen cases pronounced hopeless cured by Christian Science. I began reading the textbook, without thinking of obtaining help for myself. Soon afterwards I found all the discordant conditions had gone without my knowing anything about it. Since then Christian Science has been my only physician, and I have had many proofs of its efficacy, for I have applied it in cases of influenza, burns, lack, and in countless other cases.

I am grateful for membership in a branch church, and I am very grateful for all of Mrs. Eddy's writings and for all of our periodicals. Each one is a source of help and inspiration. While I am deeply grateful for the help Christian Science has been to me and mine I am more than grateful for the spiritual understanding which I have gained.

(Mrs.) GENEVA M. CORLISS, Boston, Mass.

Four years ago when I took up Christian Science I did it only to see what it was. I had heard and read of its healing work and I wanted to know about it. My husband was a doctor and that made it somewhat harder, as I had so much of the material to overcome. However, I kept on and became deeply interested in reading Science and Health, which was lent to me at first. Suddenly I realized that a broken-down arch was entirely healed. I had worn a supporter in my shoe and a bandage on my foot for over a year, but I took them off and have never worn them since.

I had a serious trouble of the rectum which had bothered me all my life and for which I had had two operations, and was obliged to use material remedies every day. I had been told by physicians that if neglected it would result in serious complications. This trouble was slow in yielding but through the help of loving practitioners I at last saw the erroneous mental cause and was cured. I am certainly thankful to divine Mind and to Mrs. Eddy for all my healings. I am grateful for the literature and feel we can never do without it. I love to read every bit of it.

MRS. M. J. TAYLOR, Janesville, Minn.

I want to add my testimony to the many I have read, hoping it may help some one who is seeking the truth. I had chronic appendicitis for ten years and became so much worse in the fall of 1918 that I could eat very little, and the doctors said nothing but a diet of fruit juice and an operation would help me, and that then I would not be well. My father died of consumption of the stomach and bowels. I imagined I had to have the same, but thanks to Mrs. Eddy for explaining the Scriptures to us in a way I had never heard before,—that God is just as able to heal us of our diseases and fear of disease as to forgive our sins,—after four days and nights of study and prayer I got up the fifth morning perfectly well. That was in October, 1918, since which time I have eaten anything and everything I want, have never had a return of the condition in any way and have gained twenty pounds. I am grateful beyond words; my greatest desire is so to live that my light may shine and that others seeing it may be constrained to glorify our Father in heaven.—(Mrs.) BELLE THOMPSON, Lawrenceville, Ill.

With deep thankfulness to God I gladly testify herewith that through Christian Science treatment I was completely freed from cramps of the stomach about two years ago. My trouble appeared in a severe form, and all medical skill was in vain. In my need I turned to Christian Science, and my condition improved instantly. I felt better from day to day, until I was again fully restored. I could also testify to many other healings which I have received through Christian Science. In our family circle we are very grateful for the spiritual progress made through this beautiful religion. I wish that all the sick might be healed through the teachings of Christian Science.

Signs of the Times

[The Congregationalist and Advance]

When we push inquiry back of the results of war to the conditions which made war possible, we find that the world is suffering most from the absence of good will. Had there been no ambition of conquest, no coveting of the trade or territory of a neighbor, no suspicion of motives, no heaping up of arms and drilling of troops in millions, there would have been no war. The system of defense by an armed population and systematic education in blind and selfish patriotism invented by Prussia involved a like necessity of preparation in all the other nations. The war which Prussia planned for came in due time through this absence of international good will.

We can never rebuild the world without good will—good will all round—in intimate human relations, in work, in government, in the dealings of nation with nation. The first of our great tasks is to restore the sense of personal responsibility for fair and true and kindly dealing everywhere. Suspicion, hate, envy, and malice are all destructive. There is no common prosperity, there is no individual happiness, without good will. That was our Lord's distinguishing characteristic as well as the message he most insisted on. The deepest witness of Christ's disciples is that of the good will of God toward man, and of our own opportunity of brotherly behavior toward all our neighbors.

[Manufacturers Record]

Increased wealth or power merely intensifies a man's responsibility to work. Wealth brings no release from work; it simply creates new and broader responsibilities. The man who bemoans slackness on the part of labor must study himself and his associates that he may see whether he is setting labor a good example or not. It is worse than folly to denounce labor for not producing to its full ability unless the man higher up is mentally, morally, and physically producing to the utmost power of his strength. Increasing strength to do increases the responsibility to do.

The laboring man who has lacked the opportunity for full development and who loafs on his job does not deserve blame so much as the rich man or the employer who loafs on his job by turning his work over to an understudy while he spends his time in idleness. Let the rich man, the employer, and every man who has achieved say to the man lower down in financial power, Come on, not, Go on. Then labor will march side by side in productive work with capital.

[Craig S. Thoms, Ph. D., in The Biblical World]

Too long the church has judged of its success by numbers. Numbers despised the early Christians; numbers attended the Roman shows to see Christians thrown to the lions, and thought it great sport; numbers rushed into the church in Constantine's day because it was the safe and popular thing to do, and they brought much of their heathenism with them. The church is greatly weakened because there are so many in it who are really not of it. The church has thought to save the world by getting the world into the church instead of by being an organized group of prophetic souls to leaven the world with Christ's spirit in all the relations of life. The church has pared down its message and modified its demands to gather in numbers easily instead of uttering a ringing prophetic message and insisting, with the Master, that those who did not take up their cross could not be his disciples.

Articles and Testimonies

Available articles from Christian Scientists and good testimonies from those healed by Christian Science are always welcomed for consideration by the Editors. Manuscripts for publication in the Sentinel and Journal, whether articles, poems, or testimonies, and correspondence relating thereto, should not be addressed to individuals, but to the Editorial Department, The Christian Science Publishing Society, Boston 17, U.S.A.

Letters of Appreciation

Many letters of appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and other Christian Science activities are constantly being received. These letters express what these activities mean to different individuals in various occupations and pursuits. The favorable comment that has been received on those already published indicates that they are welcome and helpful; therefore others will be published under the above heading. Extracts from such letters follow:

SINCE your last letter in May I have received the second batch of letters and papers (CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITORS). The latter arrived to-day and real welcome they are, for I consider the MONITOR the cleanest, the most entertaining, and most sparkling newspaper I know of. There is hardly anything that it contains that is not to me worth reading. I mentioned to you in my last letter that receiving it in batches of ten or twelve as was the case during my "short subscription," it is hardly possible to do their contents justice, and so it is; but I have taken those papers down from the attic and found so much good unread in them as to make me feel as though I had never had them in my hands at all. The paper is so edited that one never need think of looking at the date, which fact alone testifies as to the worth of its contents.

JUST a word as to what the MONITOR means to me. I consider that through it I am receiving a far more liberal and valuable education than I did when at school. Information is so attractively clothed as to be acquired with joy instead of laborious study, and its daily arrival is looked forward to with keenest pleasure. I like particularly the literary articles since I am interested in such matters. The Christian Science article has brought comfort and relief, many, many times. It is always "timely," bringing exactly what is needed to meet existing conditions; did I not know Science I should say that this appropriateness or aptness were merely a coincidence, but instead I know that it is the orderly unfoldment of God's goodness, which uses the marvelous channel of the MONITOR to feed the hungry world.
